Library given OK by Zoning Board

By Jennifer Ouellette

On November 15th Roger Williams College was granted a variance for its three-story library by the Bristol Zoning Board. This decision was made after a being postponed from the September 20th zoning board meeting when the matter was first presented to the board.

The controversy surrounding the new library has been that the building is 49 feet high. This is 14 feet over the 35-foot zoning limit of Bristol. In order to be able to build this, the school needed to get a variance to build to this height from the zoning board.

According to Raymond Gallison, Jr., chairman of the zoning board, the issuing of the variance turned into a very emotional issue for Bristolians. Many letters to the editor in the Bristol Phoenix have shown that townspeople are afraid that the variance may set a precedent for future contractors, making it easier for them to build high-rises.

Gallison said he doesn't think the variance would set a precedent, but that there was too much emotion involved in the case instead of staying to the facts.

"My feeling is that they aren't against the building itself, but the precedent it will set," said

Carol DiPrete, Assistant Dean for Academic Services and Library.

DiPrete said that she thinks the variance recently granted for Richard Alegria's high-rise hotel on Metacom Avenue may have made townspeople more negative towards the variance for the library. DiPrete understands the way Bristolians feel, but she said that the new library will be an advantage to the college.

The main reason a new library is needed is so the school can keep its accreditation.

The existing library was built for 1200 students with a 175-seating capacity, but the student body has increased to over 2500 students since it was built in 1969.

DiPrete said that the existing library does not allow for expansion of the book collection. She said that the library receives approximately 7,000 new books each year but just

Fetterhoff saves students money

By Melissa Juliano

Robert E. Fetterhoff, the new registrar at Roger Williams College, has come up with a new plan to help alleviate the past complications of pre-registration.

"As soon as I started work here, faculty, students and staff mentioned complaints and criticisms about the registration process. In response, I wanted to introduce a system based on the old system to simplify it for students and provide us with better information on enrollments, additions, cancellations and room assignments," said Fetterhoff.

He said there were a lot of motives behind waiving the fee. In previous years a $30 pre-registration fee was charged for registering early. The fee deterred students from pre-registering because pre-registration comes right around the holidays. and because of the $30 fee, students didn't have as much or any pocket money around the holidays. "I also checked with other public and private colleges in Rhode Island. No other college requires a fee or deposit," Fetterhoff said. This waiver has been approved by the administration, Fetterhoff said.

Instead of having students go to the Bursar's office, he said, they will now go directly to the Registrar's office. Following pre-registration, the registrar will issue course confirmations. Students that are closed out of courses or have other conflicts will be

No gold at the end of this Rainbow

Roger Williams College has bid a goodbye of mixed emotion to the Broken Rainbow Committee.

The committee was considered to be a favorable addition to the classroom. It caused students to question many important issues, and caused others unrest. The program, however, after having been funded last year and considered a success, was not given funding this year.

The Broken Rainbow Committee was a committee co-founded by William O'Connell, Director of Auxiliary and Student Activities, and Joyce Stein, former Director of Counseling. The committee's purpose, O'Connell said, was to bring in speakers who were unrepresented on this primarily white, middle-class campus. "We don't represent groups other than what we have on campus," said O'Connell.

The committee sponsored two events during the previous school year, speakers Dick Gregory and Angela Davis. These were the most well-attended speaker events in RWC history according to Tony Ferreira, Coordinator of Student Activities. Ferreira added that many professors required their students to attend, because they felt the speeches would be beneficial to their courses. Gregory spoke to a crowd of 400 and Davis to a crowd of 500 to 600.

The reasons behind the elimination of this committee is where the controversy lies, with members reporting different suspicions and not just a few regrets. The question of the budget was a major issue.

Don Whitworth, a psychology professor, said, "I feel there is a direct connection between the political activity of the students and the lack of funding of the Broken Rainbow Committee." The matter of working on consensus also seemed to cause a problem.

Asked how they were approached with the idea of the committee, Whitworth and Stein recalled the formation in same way. Whitworth said that O'Connell came to the faculty members asking for help in getting students involved in campus activities because there had been a lack of involvement in his activities.

Members of this committee, besides O'Connell, Whitworth and Stein, included counseling staff members Jim Woodruff and Romelyn Woodruff, administrators Nondas Voll and Dwight Datcher, and faculty members Richard Potter

The NC Factor

To NC or not to NC, that may longer be the question for students who fail their courses. The "not completed" option has been used and abused for too long, giving students an easy out if they do not feel like putting any effort into their classes.

Although the NC does get put on the student's record permanently and it does not affect the student's grade point average. Come now, do we need this hand-holding when we are supposed to be responsible adults at a higher institution for learning?

The Faculty Senate is deciding today whether or not to get rid of the NC and replace it with an F grade. This may seem a harsh move to some, but when students decide to go to college they should realize that they are there to learn and work for their grades.

There are some problems with doing away completely with the NC. It has been argued that students should be allowed to NC a course if they have had problems at home, and that the NC should be allowed for freshmen who go through an adjustment period when they come to school. This point is well-taken, in these special cases provisions should be made and guaranteed for the student's welfare.

Maybe once students realize that they will get an F if that is the quality of work they have been producing instead of NC-ing their way out of it, they will rethink their concept of what a college education really means. That is not to say that college life should be pure studying, 24 hours a day. The best of us could not accomplish that even if we tried. The point is that by having an easy out people may not work to their full potential.

When you think about how much it costs to come to this school for four years, it seems as though students would want to spend that time and money in a responsible way by doing the best job possible and not settle for just "getting by."

OP-ED

Heart to Heart: Depression

By Nancy Hood, RISW

Dear Readers,

We all experience ups and downs from day to day and some feelings of depression are common in most people's lives. What is depression? Depression involves a variety of symptoms that persist over a period of time. These include: loss of interest or pleasure in usual activities, change in appetite (increase or decrease), sleep disturbance, fatigue, poor concentration, feelings of worthlessness, social withdrawal, hopelessness and despair, crying more than usual, irritability, headaches, gastrointestinal upsets, sexual dysfunction and suicidal thoughts.

Sadness and loss of interest combined with two or more of the above symptoms persisting over a two week period or more, or extreme highs and lows indicate a depression thereby suggesting a need for professional consultation.

What causes depression? There are a lot reasons why students get depressed. Loss is a common cause; also academic disappointments and failures, family problems, career concerns, and unresolved childhood issues can result in depression.

I recall going through a depression when I was in college. I wasn't doing well in my chosen major, and I was sad about a relationship that didn't work out. There were also unresolved issues from my childhood that I was trying to sort out. I suffered from low self-esteem, lack of motivation, and it was difficult to drag myself out of bed. I could not concentrate on my classes and assignments. I overate, cut classes and felt guilty and worse about myself. I wished I could be someone else and had fleeting thoughts of suicide. Never did I realize during all of this that there was a name for what I was experiencing and available treatment that could help me. I felt that somehow I had to get myself motivated. I had to fix the problem myself and when I could not do this, it only added to my sense of failure and low self-esteem. It wasn't until a friend of mine picked up on my sadness and told me about her own positive experience with seeing a counselor that I sought professional help and began to feel better about myself.

It is not only appropriate, it is important to turn to others for help even when we experience mild depression. Too often people wait until they are in crisis before seeking help.

What help is available? Mental health professionals can evaluate the seriousness of the depression and work with you to explore and clarify the causes of the depression. Depending on the nature of the depression, psychotherapy or a combination of antidepressants and psychotherapy may be recommended.

How can friends help? The support of friends and family is extremely important to the depressed person. Friends can help by being accepting without being critical and by being empathic. Often it's a friend who encourages the person who is depressed to seek help. If you are concerned about a friend who is depressed, don't afraid to ask whether s/he is thinking about suicide. Not all depressed people are suicidal but most people think about suicide themselves or their lives clearly and therefore don't have a sense of options available to them. If you agree to keep their secret, then you are caught in a trap of colliding with them in their self-destruction.

Ask your friend to get professional help and offer to go with him or her for support. If s/he says no, try to find out what his/her resistance is about. Consult with a counselor yourself on how best to help your friend. Do not try to help your friend by yourself. If s/he is threatening suicide now, stay with him/her and send someone to get help.

Surrounding You

By Mark Gould, Natural Science

Everything that we do has an impact on the environment. You and I are part of it. When we shop, travel, study, recreate, vegetate, propagate, or just be, we are part of the earth. For better or worse, we use air and water; the quality of the products is the basis for our health and wealth.

As I have mentioned in previous articles, our environment in Bristol is incredible; we have it made here. The "natural" environment is beautiful--the idyllic campus on the shores of the bay. The "man-made" environment is modern--campus buildings more or less fitting together to make the campus. The town of Bristol--a cute historical village with a fine patina.

Here at school, as any place on planet Earth, we play an environmental Monopoly game. For example, the utilities: we assume that the water from the tap is the best. Have you looked at the product? Can you answer why the Bristol Water Authority is seeking to tap into the Scituate Reservoir system? Doesn't the Kickemuit system provide a sparkling, crystal-clear elixir? How do you use this water?

One use of the water is that with each flush, the environmental maxim "out of sight, out of mind" is employed. For most people, this is the basis for environmental appreciation. All is well as long as the toilet flushes, garbage is removed, the light switch can illuminate and darken, the stereo emits and the car coughs to life.

But what happens when the systems that we depend upon fail? How do we react? What are the essential systems for survival? Do we do anything to improve the environment?

How many of you are reading this with coffee in hand? What is the status of your cup? Styrofoam? Paper? What did you do with the multi-rough drafts of that paper?

Many of the items we use and daily activities we take part in are "programmed". Omnipotence is the name of the game. Our comfort level of using available resources exceeds the ability of Nature to deal with our by-products. We place infinite demands upon a finite system.

Unfortunately, these utilized utilities are cheap causing our solutions to be short-sighted. We must live up to the standard of the "Jones", we must exceed the Smiths! The name of the game: Win!

Similar to the deal of Dorian Gray, a price must be paid. Stay tuned!

and Charles Trimbach. The committee was run informally, decisions being made on a consensus basis, and no single member designated as the committee's chair. The last meeting of the committee was held on March 25, 1988.

There seems to be some disagreement as to why the committee disbanded. O'Connell said he felt it was clearly a matter of funding. O'Connell's office funded the Broken Rainbow Committee for the first year, intending for the Budget Committee to pick up its funding the following year. O'Connell explained that the Budget Committee felt uneasy funding any new programs due to an investigation being done at that time by the Board of Trustees into the college's budget process. O'Connell is a member of the Budget Committee.

Romelyn Woodruff, of the Counseling Center, said that it was a matter of the committee no longer being able to work on a consensus basis, namely that all decisions had to be unanimous.

Charles Trimbach, Coordinator of the Psychology Division, said that part of the program's success came from the trust between the members, and when that trust started to break down, so did the Broken Rainbow.

Whitworth felt that the protests "scared the s_____ out of the administration because they have had complete and total power and haven't had to put up with student discontent." He also said that trust was an issue on the committee because members would threaten to resign if the issue got touchy, and that people were unwilling, even on a committee, to confront the issues.

Stein, who was fired in September, questioned the truthfulness of the Budget Committee's refusal to fund any new programs because money went towards the hiring of a new health educator.

When asked if there was a possible connection between the student involvement in the Bart Schiavo incident and the message of Dick Gregory, O'Connell said, "I do not feel there was a connection between our program and the student involvement in the Bart Schiavo incident."

Bart Schiavo, former Dean of the College, was fired by President William Rizzini in February. Rizzini faced strong opposition from the student body about the decision. Schiavo eventually resigned.

Whitworth said he felt that students were beginning to get the idea that they could influence power and they were beginning to get at the truth that the college was run by their dollars.

Romelyn Woodruff said that she would like to think that the Broken Rainbow Committee had something to do with the Schiavo involvement, that it did spark students to speak out.

Trimbach said he suspected a connection between the Schiavo involvement and the lack of funding of the Broken Rainbow Committee. He did add that the scheduled workshops after the Angela Davis speech were cancelled because some considered it a bad time due to turmoil going on with Bart Schiavo's termination. He, however, felt it was a perfect time.

O'Connell resigned from the committee on Feb. 22, 1988. He declined to publicly comment on his reasons.

When asked how they felt about the dissolution of the program, members gave varied responses. Dwight Datcher, Assistant Director of Athletics, felt that programs like Minority Affairs, the Jewish Association, and Uniting Students for Social Awareness, would pick up some of the concepts of the Broken Rainbow Committee, cushioning the loss.

"I hope the breakup of the Broken Rainbow Committee will strengthen the college if each member of the committee will channel energies elsewhere provided they are not stuck on the process. Damn the process," Datcher said.

O'Connell was also optimistic. "A bright star that burned out, people will look at that star and take it in different directions."

Whitworth expressed anger about the way "it came down." He does not feel that the Broken Rainbow Committee's directives in different branches will work, describing the idea as a kind of organized chaos. Whitworth described it as, "A morally corrupt way of destroying a very important learning process on this campus."

Potter, an American Studies professor, expressed sadness over the committee's breakup.

He said he felt that the excitement was lost, that he had never before seen students question things so widely and continuously, and he added that he has not seen it since.

Library

has nowhere to put all of them.

The new library, which will be situated next to the existing one, will allow for seating of 450 students and a 50 percent expansion of the book collection, she said.

The new building was initially designed by architects Crissman and Solomon after they conducted studies of the open space and travel patterns of students on campus in May 1986.

The architectural firm of Robinson, Green and Beretta, of Providence, was then hired to further develop the design of the library from the original plans. The firm took the three-story concept and decided it was justifiable because of the results of the studies.

The building delay came as a result of the two previous zoning board meetings. Gallison said that when RWC came before the zoning board at the Sept. 20th meeting, the building was presented as being cost effective and complementary to the campus. The building includes a clock tower that would be the focal point of the campus without being visually distracting, said Gallison.

At this meeting, the board questioned whether the school needed a variance or a special exception, so it delayed its decision until the Oct. 11th meeting so that both sides could gather the necessary documents from each other so a decision could be made.

Gallison said that the board did not receive its documents from the school until Oct. 11, leaving inadequate time for the board to examine the documents and make a decision.

Before passing the motion for a variance at the November meeting, board member Hermano Correia said that if the variance was not granted it would be an impediment to education in future generations. Fellow board member Georgina Macdonald agreed that the variance should be granted, on the basis that the three-story library is not unordinary and the fact that other buildings on the campus are over the 35-foot zoning limit.

Commenting on the delays RWC has had in getting a variance, James DiPrete, Jr., attorney for RWC, said that he thought that the hearing coming before an election sometimes causes this type of thing to be driven by emotion not logic. "I fell in love with the building, it's going to be a landmark," said DiPrete.

Meal Plan to be spiced up

By Kerry Kelly

There are expectations for improvement of the current meal plan for the benefit of all Roger Williams College students. These improvements will include a renovated snack bar and cafeteria, and either a point or declining balance system for the meal plan.

Students pay approximately $2,820 a year for the meal plan at RWC. The plan is mandatory for all on-campus students. This money, according to Val Mahoney, the Director of Dining Services, aside from providing students with three meals a day, covers administrative costs.

These costs include: damages to the cafe, china and silverware, and the paperwork involved in producing and keeping track of student identification cards. "I spend between $15,000-$20,000 a year on china and silverware, students don't understand that when they throw out the dishes they have to pay for it," Mahoney said.

There are some on-campus students who, though they pay the mandatory fee, feel that they are not receiving their money's worth.

Freshman Anne Marie Downs is unable to go to lunch on Monday, Wednesday and Friday due to class scheduling. "I'm losing over $500 because of my classes this semester, so I don't understand why the meal plan should be mandatory," she said.

Freshman Trista Cone is also losing money on the meal plan. "I have to go home every weekend to work, so I don't eat here then," she said.

Mahoney said there is an alternative to those who may miss lunch or dinner during the week. They can pick up the menu for the month in the Dining Service office, circle the item they would like, and a cafeteria worker will "brown bag" it for them. The student can pick it up before or after his or her class. Students must provide a copy of their class schedules for Mahoney's files.

She added that under state law they must provide meals if there are no kitchen facilities in the dorms, which there aren't on campus. Kitchens are only included at the apartments at the Almeida apartment complex. This is only for the student's protection, said Mahoney.

Another alternative to the meal plan is a modified meal plan. This new plan is only one of Mahoney's goals.

Presently Mahoney is trying to get a committee together consisting of students from each dorm, as well as two Student Senate members. Senators Melissa Anderson and Jeff Neuschatz have been appointed to the committee.

Neuschatz said, "We are working on getting together, but so far we haven't."

Mahoney said of the committee, "It's really important to have a student group to get involved...let them know how we run."

Freshman Phil Amara heard of the meeting from a Senate member and decided to get involved.

Right now Mahoney's priority is to renovate the snack bar and "make it more modern." She hopes to have this project completed by next fall. Mahoney's long-term goal is to renovate the cafeteria and have a modified meal plan.

The specifics of these goals include having a conventional cafeteria line, which would cut down on waiting. Freshman Jackie Conover complained that, "I always have to wait 10-15 minutes in line for dinner."

Mahoney responded, "The cafeteria was designed to serve 450 students. We serve over 1,000 every day at lunch."

The cafeteria and dishroom will also hopefully be expanded within the next three years, she said.

In regards to the meal plan itself, Mahoney hopes to install either a point system or a declining balance system.

A declining system, which Mahoney prefers, would enable students to pay for each meal, have that price taken off their bill, and the money left after the administrative costs have been deducted would be returned at the end of the year.

Mahoney expects all of these goals will be reached within the next three years. "We are making strides, but like everything else in this world, all good things take time," she said.

Condoms for the well-dressed co-ed

CPS-- It's the final touch for the well-dressed college student: condoms in school colors.

Students at most schools will be able to get them soon, says Nicholas Fogel, Jr., president of College Condoms, the San Diego firm that's selling the devices to selected campuses in California, Arizona, Florida, Iowa and Kansas, "if the market is there."

The condoms are sold in packets of six for a suggested retail price of $2.99. "At USC, the packets are three red and three yellow. For schools with three colors it's two, two and two," Fogel explained.

Red, yellow, dark and light blue, black, green and pink condoms now are available, but students soon will be able to buy them in brown, emerald, white, "every color," Fogel promises.

The inspiration for the product came when Fogel attended a basketball game with an alumni of the University of North Carolina. The friend wore Tar Heel sportswear, prompting Fogel to tease that he probably also wore a Tar Heel condom.

The idea stayed with Fogel. His first consignment of 14,000 packets went on sale four months ago. A second batch of 240,000 boxes is almost ready for the marketplace.

While some campus stores carry the product and some choose not to, Fogel says he's had "100 percent acceptance" form all the campuses he's contacted.

The school colors, Fogel claims, "have relieved the stigma of buying a condom. (Students) don't feel like they're really buying condoms. They can joke about it."

So far, at least one outlet reports sales of the condoms are slow.

Mort Spiegel, manager of Campus Drug near Arizona State University, says, "People have to become aware that it is here. We've sold a couple, though, I think it will catch on."

Fogel says typical reactions are like those of two doctors he contacted. One wanted to buy several packets to give as presents at his class reunion. The second doctor said, "Those are great! I can use them as stocking stuffers."

Hawks shaping up for '88-'89 season

By Stephen Dwyer

Dwight Datcher, head coach for the RWC Hawks basketball team said he wants to put last year's disappointing season behind him and start anew for the 1988-89 season.

Datcher said he would like the Hawks to better last year's record of six wins and 20 losses. Two of his goals for the team are to finish the season as conference champions and to be a lot quicker than last year's team.

In the 1986-87 season, the Hawks earned the conference title. At the end of the season the team had a record of 13 wins and 14 losses, and they made it to the playoffs.

Datcher prepares the Hawks for playoff intensity each year by playing three strong, nationally ranked teams: Clark University, Southeastern Massachusetts University, and Stonehill. To make team quickness effective, Datcher has continuously stressed a very tough, full-court pressure defense to open up opportunities for easy fast-break baskets.

The four key returnees are: sophomore guard Vinnie Godwin, senior swingman Rick Severson; junior forward-center Lee Marelli; and junior forward Mike Worthly.

The team has seven new players who will seek to add new depth and spirit. The players are:

"I'm expecting a lot from the freshmen this year, especially from Lamont, Gary, Ronald and Andrew," said Datcher.

The Eighth Annual Many Moods of Christmas concert will be presented on Saturday, Dec. 3 at 7:30 pm and on Sunday, Dec. 4 at 3 pm, at St. Mary's Church, Wood Street, Bristol.

Members of the Bristol County Interfaith Choir, the Roger Williams College Chorale, the Bristol High School Chamber Singers, and Our Lady of Fatima High School Chorus, will present the eighth annual concert.

Tickets are available at Caron's Jewelry, Hope Street, Bristol; Wicker Wagon, Main Street, Warren; and the Public Relations Office at Roger Williams College, beginning Nov. 14. Tickets are $3 general admission.

The concert will again be performed twice due to a gift from the students of RWC, through the Student Senate.

We anticipate that for each student, this process should take a maximum of two to four minutes. We hope that the lines will move quickly. Each class will be segregated alphabetically so there is no large crowd at any one time," Fetterhoff said.

Although the Bursar will not be directly involved with pre-registration, they will be holding students with outstanding balances, he said. They will either not issue or not accept the student's schedule for processing until financial or delinquent conflicts are worked out.

In the past, the Registrar's office was the only place that had registration cards and course booklets. The process has now become decentralized, Fetterhoff said. Materials will be distributed to divisions, students then get their registration cards and course booklets from their advisor. After reviewing the booklet, students can then make appointments with their advisors.

This new system will cut long lines and integrate freshmen and sophomores, he said. It will also prevent discrimination against students who are still considered freshmen due to their present number of credits, and transfer students, he said.

This is all part of an effort to streamline the system and cut out the "red tape," Fetterhoff said. It does not guarantee that classes will not be closed out, he said. However, it will make things more organized and helpful to the division coordinators, faculty and students.

Next January he said there will still be mail-in and in-person registration.

(CPS) -- Dartmouth College officials have returned a $5,000 donation from Playboy because many students find the magazine demeaning.

Female students at Providence College apparently do, too. Only one woman showed up to be interviewed when the magazine sent a photographer to the campus to hunt for models for the magazine's upcoming "Women of the Big East" pictorial.

Playboy awarded a $5,000 Anson Mount Scholar-Athlete scholarship to Dartmouth in the name of Paul Sorenson, a Dartmouth football player with a 4.0 grade-point average who was named to the magazine's preseason all-America team.

Sorenson was nominated for the Mount award by Dartmouth's sports information office.

But Dartmouth officials decided last week to decline the scholarship money, although Sorenson will keep the bronze medallion and the trip to

'Women of the Big East' won't be from Dartmouth

Disney World that comes with it.

"We're extremely proud of Paul Sorenson," said Alex Huppe, a spokesman for the school. "But it is the college's view that many on campus find the magazine demeaning. And at a time when we are actively trying to recruit women, we felt we could not keep the money."

"It's funny," said Gary Cole, Playboy's sports editor. "By nominating him and accepting the award, they already got whatever bad publicity they were worried about. By not accepting the money, they're really just taking money away from some other student."

Playboy had outraged administrators at several Catholic colleges that belong to the Big East athletic conference last month when the magazine announced it would visit their campuses to interview female students to participate in a "Women of the Big East" pictorial. Past pictorials have featured photographs of nude and semi-nude students.

Officials at St. John's, Georgetown, Villanova and Seton Hall universities, as well as Providence and Boston colleges, had urged their students not to participate in the pictorial. Students at Providence apparently heeded their message.

Playboy photographer David Mecey had hoped to meet with several students for the pictorial, scheduled for April 1989 issue.

But Mecey had to move his operation from a hotel to a minivan at a gas station across the street when the hotel announced he could sleep but not conduct business on the premises. College officials also said he was not welcome on campus and refused to place his ad in the student newspaper.

Mecey's assistant Ric Moore said he wasn't surprised that only one woman showed up for an interview. "There were television cameras everywhere," he said, referring to interest by local media to the magazine's controversial feature.

No nude photographs were planned during the initial interviews.

Mecey's troubles aren't just limited to Providence. A Massachusetts hotel also decided not to allow Playboy to stay or to interview students there when it meets with Boston College students in mid-November.

The low-down on the pump-up

By Melissa Juliano

The use and abuse of Anabolic Steroids was the topic of a panel discussion at the Paolino Recreation Center on Wednesday, Nov. 2nd.

Dominic F. Capablo Jr. the senior narcotics inspector for the Drug Control Division of The Rhode Island Department of Health, spoke about steroid abuse and its consequences after introductory remarks by moderator Earle Perkins, director trainer of the A.A. Savastano Sports Medicine Center at Rhode Island Hospital in Providence.

"Possession of steroids is a misdemeanor in the state of Rhode Island. They are available by prescription only," Capablo said. He said that possession of steroids will result in less than one year in jail or a $500 fine. More and more athletes are injecting steroids by a needle and syringe which is a felony. Capablo said.

He also discussed how this does not help the AIDS scare. Capablo said, "Athletes who are sharing needles are also sharing AIDS and hepatitis. Many steroids users are polydrug users, combining the use of steroids with cocaine and downers (barbiturates)," Capablo said.

He explained how steroids are used on a cycle period, usually for eight to 10 weeks. The steroids diminish, then go on cycle again. Sometimes, stacking (using several different steroids at once during a 12 week period is done), Capablo said.

"You can spend up to $2,000 a cycle with no problem," an athlete told Capablo.

Most steroids came from Hartford, Connecticut, where the drugs are put out on the street or prescribed by doctors. They are also rerouted to other cities. Athletes use them for immediate results and have internal problems later on, he said.

Daniel Kapstein, professional athlete consultant and assistant football coach said, "Fifteen to twenty years ago, one to two football players were very big, but it was rare to find big men. Today, the men are much bigger, stronger and faster. I feel that a lot of young people are dabbling in steroids."

The size of college linemen is about 267 pounds. That is the same as pro football players, Dr. Ernest Lowe Jr., M.D. said in his keynote address about Anabolic Steroids and Sports.

Dr. Lowe followed up his brief lecture with a slide presentation which described the affects of steroids on men and women. For women, he said use of steroids can lead to excessive body hair, a masculine build and loss of menstrual periods. For men, excessive use leads to the development of breasts, liver ailments and sterility, he said.

Money decision approved

by Michele Baccarella

A new financial decision has been made which will allow the Student Senate to roll over money at the end of the year said Student Senate President Debi Elliott. Elliott said this means that instead of leftover monies going into a general fund, it may now go back to the clubs for the next year or at least into the Student Senate's General fund, which is where the clubs are funded from.

Senate member Melissa Anderson and Elliott, went through the Controller's office and Student Activities office to see if such a rollover was possible. Plans are being developed on how it will actually be set up. The Senate is currently looking for students to join the following committees: Library, Maintenance, Security, Fine, Quality of Life, Financial Board, Public Relation Committees.

ONE LAST FALL FROM INNOCENCE

Was it the green of your eyes that did it?

A beautiful shade of green indeed.

Or your smile that pushed me over the edge.

Placing me on an emotional ledge.

As for our friendship, it is quite rare.

But I never thought to see you bare.

All our feelings exposed by a kiss on the nose.

And your ever malingering dare.

But for your touch I've always longed.

And ignoring morality, I entered headlong.

For the most part with marriage I will not impose.

Because this I believe is ever so wrong.

Though this one exception I will not forget.

And it may not be one I will always regret.

It may have been fate.

That led to this date.

But my guilt is too great to cancel this debt.

Certainly not breakfast and certainly not lunch, so it must be dinner. I like the eggplant parmesan, that's the best. I hate the fish.

Jennifer Goddard

My favorite food is probably Shepherd's Pie. My least favorite has something to do with eggplant.

Grace Mocerri

I like breakfast. I like the french toast. I hate the meats, like the steaks and stuff like that.

Karen Grzegorzczuk
Manchester, New Hampshire

I guess the Eggplant Parmesan is my favorite. I like it because I've never had it before so I have nothing to compare it with. The Shepherd Pie is the worst thing the cafe serves.

I hate breakfast, lunch is OK, dinner gets better. That eggplant and the soups -- except broccoli -- are the best. Anything to do with seafood, mystery meat and the seafood surprise, I don't like.

Brown students protest rapes

(CPS) -- Still another campus erupted in anger last week to protest multiple rapes near their school.

About 100 Brown University students gathered Nov. 2 to protest two recent rapes near their Providence, Rhode Island, campus, and to call for better security for women.

"On campus and in the Providence community as a whole," student Kathy Hathaway told the gathering, which she organized, "there's been so much emotion, but no forum to release the emotion. We wanted to provide that arena."

At the "speak out," about 25 Brown women told about how they'd been victimized in the past.

Two Brown women were raped within two weeks in October. Police suspect the same assailant committed both crimes, but have made no arrests yet.

In recent weeks, University of Illinois women have been marching repeatedly to express their frustration about the lack of arrests in a series of 15 rapes on or near their campus since last April.

UI police also suspect one person is responsible.

Two women were assaulted in separate incidents in September near the campus of Plymouth State College in New Hampshire. Baylor and Yale university students also have reported near-campus assaults so far this school year.

In early October, the Santa Monica (Cal.) Hospital Rape Treatment Center released a report estimation that, nationwide, only one of 10 campus sexual assaults are ever reported to authorities.
