RWU School of Law at International Law Weekend in NYC

Posted by David Logan on 01/08/2014 at 11:54 AM

Law students from the RWU International Law Society travelled to NYC late last semester for an opportunity to network and learn from leaders in the field. They were delighted to encounter our own Professor Louise Ellen Teitz, who is wrapping up her tour as a diplomat as the First Secretary at The Hague Conference on Private International Law in The Hague, The Netherlands (<http://law.rwu.edu/louise-ellen-teitz>). Here are some reflections from one of the attendees, 2L Jocelyn Valenzuela, and below that some pictures from the weekend.

“
International Law Weekend in NY was a great opportunity for the ILS community of RWU School of law because it opened our horizons as to the many opportunities available to us, and proved that RWU School of Law is well suited to prepare us to compete in the legal field whether locally or internationally. Walking into that first panel and seeing Professor and founding mother Louise Ellen Teitz just uplifted my spirits and completely changed the way I viewed my participation in this conference. Not only was she in our first panel, but was highly praised by other panelists as being a key component to these conferences and as a student of RWU School of Law, it is great to hear comments like this. The panels were extremely helpful since they dealt not just with new topics or legal issues in international law, but strategies and tactics that we, as prospective attorneys should be aware of when in search of that position we seek.
