Alumni Bulletin of ROGER WILLIAMS COLLEGE

Published three times yearly for the Alumni Association by the Office of Public Information, Bristol, R. I. 02809

The return on the Alumni Council questionnaire sent out in September was gratifying -- so gratifying, in fact, that we have our biggest Class Notes section to date. In addition to furnishing basic information about what, where, and how you're doing, a great number of you made worthwhile comments on the types of information and assistance the College might give to its graduates. Four themes were dominant: new programs at RWC; the future direction of RWC; job placement; and the possibility of graduate courses at RWC. This issue of the bridge attempts to bring alumni up to date on new and enlarged programs. A future issue will treat in detail the Office of Career Planning and Placement. In May we hope to be able to report on the findings of the accreditation committee, due to visit the College in April.

We would like to keep our alumni information file as current as possible. If you have not recently done so, please fill in the questionnaire in the back and mail it to the Public Information Office. Thank you!

THE OPEN DIVISION

A LEARNING ALTERNATIVE AT RWC

Last summer the faculty approved the establishment of a seventh academic division of the College called the Open Division. A fully accredited program leading to the Roger Williams College baccalaureate degree, it is one form of the external degree concept which in recent years has gained currency in colleges across the nation.

The Open Division appeals most typically to working adults with experience worthy of academic credit who want to earn a degree while maintaining their commitments to work and/or family. Since it is geared to existing lifestyles, it offers an unusually flexible format. Students help to draft and design their own programs of study, which may include tutorials, independent studies and readings, lectures and conferences, internships, past and present employment or volunteer service, classroom courses, and other forms of learning. Students may tap the resources of the community, business, industry, and government, as well as those of the College.

The general requirements to complete the degree are: (1) 38 units of credit; (2) representative studies in the social sciences, natural sciences, fine arts, and humanities; (3) at least eight classroom courses, either at RWC or another institution; (4) one year's enrollment in the Open Division (not necessarily involving residency or work done on the campus); (5) completion of a major project or several projects closely relating the student's goals to his learning experiences.

Upon entering the Open Division, each student is assigned a facilitator (learning advisor) who oversees all phases of his progress toward his degree. At the outset the facilitator assists the student in defining his goals, in preparing a portfolio of his past, creditable experiences, and in designing a program which embodies his goals. The student, his facilitator, an Open Division faculty member, and other persons form a program committee which approves all credit given to the student's portfolio and program design, makes additional suggestions to enrich his program, and ultimately recommends the awarding of the degree.

According to John Stout, Coordinator, the Open Division now has 53 fully enrolled students, with several more in process. Twenty-five of these students, responding specifically to the Division's offering of a B.S. in Social and Health Services, are forming the first "cluster" under the leadership of Mrs. Joellen Watson, who is on leave from the nursing faculty of Salve Regina College. Mrs. Watson is a doctoral candidate at Boston College and principal consultant to the Social and Health Services program. Barry Sugarman, who holds a Ph.D. in sociology from Princeton, will serve as cluster leader for the second group of students to enroll in this program.

Diversity is, perhaps, the Division's salient feature. Students range in age from 19 to over 60; their educational backgrounds vary from no college to four years of college; they are geographically located within the state, out of state, and overseas; and their programs reflect a multitude of interests, including fine arts, business administration, politics, social work, food service management, photography, and engineering. Some of the students were suggested by Dr. Gauvey who, through previous acquaintance, knew of their interest in non-traditional college programs.

One of these students is Steven Esons, pictured with John Stout on the preceding page. He is described by Mr. Stout as the "catalyst" through which the Open Division came into being. Steve enrolled in a regular RWC program in September, 1972. By the middle of his sophomore year he was restless and, in view of a growing interest in law, decided to transfer. He discussed with Dr. Gauvey the feasibility of an external program granting the Roger Williams College degree. That spring, with John Stout, he undertook an independent study in which he researched existing external degree programs. Steve then was made chairman of an ad hoc committee which, after four months of study, drew up a proposal for the College. This proposal was approved by the Faculty Senate in May, and in June by the Board of Trustees. Mr. Stout was elected Coordinator.

Now Program Assistant for the Open Division, Steve has designed a unique pre-law program for himself. It included, this past semester, preparing cases for litigation in the Consumer Fraud Division of the Rhode Island Attorney General's Office. Steve went to Washington in January to investigate a Federal grant from HEW's fund for the improvement of post-secondary education.

The Open Division will periodically use some of the offerings of the Jewish Community Center of Rhode Island in Providence. Last fall the JCC was co-sponsor for a course entitled "Urban Problems: Choices for '76", given by Dr. Benjamin Chinitz, an internationally known specialist in urban and regional analysis and public policy. A new course by Dr. Chinitz, "Can Cities Survive?" commenced February 9. Also being offered this spring is "Hollywood in Its Heyday", which will review the American film industry through the Depression and World War II with particular focus on subcultures as represented in eight screened films. This course is taught by Michael Fink, Associate Professor of Liberal Arts at the Rhode Island School of Design.

Alumni wanting to know more about the Open Division should contact John Stout or Steven Esons in the Administration Building at Bristol, 255-2371. Interested alumni may also request that their names be placed on the mailing list of "The Open Letter", published monthly by the Open Division.

RWC INTRODUCES BUSINESS INTERNSHIPS

Accounting Area Coordinator Paul Langelo recently announced that the Business Division is now participating in the Small Business Institute program, sponsored by the U. S. Small Business Administration, in which students, as part of their academic program, provide management counseling and advice to members of the small business community. Accordingly, the College has introduced a new course, "Small Business Internship", which is open to seniors and selected juniors.

Student interns will acquire practical training by applying their problem-solving skills in a real business environment. Cases will involve clients of the SBA or recipients of government contracts awarded by the SBA. Students will meet with the firms' representatives, establish work methodology, gather, diagnose, and evaluate data, make recommendations, and follow up on the firms' problems and needs. Normally, a case will be completed in one semester, during which the students will be required to write monthly reports and a final report for the SBA and their clients. Three units of credit will be granted for successful completion of the internship.

During its first year of operation, the Small Business Institute program (initiated in 1972) was found to be of substantial benefit to both business firms and student counselors. The SBA, calling the program "a good example of private sector involvement with government", noted that "the partnership provides a multiplier effect where the ultimate product (counseling services) is greater than the sum of inputs from university and government."

COOPERATIVE EDUCATION TO EXPAND INTO LIBERAL ARTS AREAS

William H. Knight ('70), Director of Cooperative Education, is laying the groundwork for expansion of the Cooperative Education Program into liberal arts curricula. Co-op is a plan for integrating meaningful work experience with academic studies. It is a cooperative partnership between students, their colleges, and employers in the "real world." Throughout most of their college careers, students electing Co-op alternate periods of classroom instruction with periods of full-time, paid employment in their intended career fields. By acquiring professional skills and attitudes before they graduate, students quite obviously increase their value to potential employers. And they earn a salary to help defray educational costs.

Introduced at RWC in 1965, Co-op has been an optional plan for business and engineering students. Now forming is a Co-op Committee to include representation from each of the College's divisions and constituencies (faculty, administration, students) and current employers. In addition, last fall RWC joined the Northeastern University Consortium, presently consisting of three 4-year and four 2-year institutions that have Co-op programs. The Consortium meets monthly to discuss common problems and Co-op experiences. Among other advantages, in Mr. Knight's view, the Consortium gives the 2-year college students the chance to continue their studies at senior colleges, using the Co-op alternative.

Some of the employers cooperating with Roger Williams College are: IRS (Providence and Taunton); American Mutual Insurance; Department of the Navy (Pennsylvania and Connecticut); BIF Industries; and the Town of North Kingstown. Mr. Knight says that more than 80 students, most of them freshmen, have indicated that they wish to participate in Co-op as soon as they are eligible. Alumni in a position to offer Co-op assignments to students are encouraged to contact Mr. Knight at Bristol, 255-2109.

Mrs. Mildred Brown, veterans' recorder, assists William Kelly.

SERVICES FOR VETERANS . . .

William J. Kelly, a 1974 alumnus and a veteran of 3-1/2 years' service in the U. S. Air Force, is Veterans' Counselor and coordinator of the Veterans' Affairs Office. The office, he says, is "a service to assist vets in almost any way possible." He and Stephen Biello, an on-campus V.A. representative, handle the College- and V.A.-related paperwork for veterans, who constitute about one-third of the student population.

Bill terms himself a "red tape cutter." His duties include forms and language clarification; familiarizing veterans with admission requirements, programs, and graduation requirements; determining eligibility for veterans' benefits; helping veterans transfer credits from military schools or private institutions they may have attended while in service; and, in general, expediting the enrollment process for veterans. He also does peer counseling and makes appropriate referrals for problems of a personal nature. Traffic peaks in the Veterans' Affairs Office at each registration period, when the most pressing problem is money.

Outreach work includes regular mailings of the Veterans' Information Booklet to lists of recently discharged veterans and off-campus recruiting for both the day and evening divisions. Bill has talked with personnel directors of businesses in Providence, Newport, Warwick, and Cranston. He has visited police stations on behalf of the law enforcement program, and last fall addressed about 40 trainees at the police training academy in Providence. In addition, he is the RWC counselor assigned to Project AHEAD, a U. S. Army-sponsored program whereby men and women who enlist in the Army are simultaneously accepted at a participating college. (At present, Roger Williams is the only four-year institution in Rhode Island participating in the plan.) The informational aspect of the Veterans' Affairs Office is not confined to the College's own veterans -- any veteran, in fact, may call on Bill for assistance.

PLACEMENT OFFICE Donna DeStefano has been named Acting Director of Career Planning and Placement. She is a graduate of the University of New Hampshire and a candidate for a master's degree in counseling at Rhode Island College. Miss DeStefano has on hand a limited file of teaching positions (elementary through college level) and a list of contacts with various business firms, including some large corporations, supplied by the association of Eastern College Personnel Officers. Her office is in Residence Hall I (Office of the Dean of Counseling Services) and her telephone number is 255-2221.

ELECTED RECENTLY . . . to the College Corporation, on October 17, Peter Sousa ('71), Anne Caldarella ('72), and David Dupre ('74). . . to the Board of Trustees, on December 12, Philip A. Anderson of Barrington. Mr. Anderson is president of the East Providence firm of Creative Learning, a producer and distributor of educational film strips. He is the son of Alvin E. Anderson, chairman of the Roger Williams College Board of Trustees from 1960 to 1969.

AUDIO-VISUAL Barry L. Kleckner has been appointed Media Specialist for the College, DEPARTMENT responsible for integrating non-print services with the book services provided by the Library. Mr. Kleckner earned his bachelor's at URI in 1970, and in 1972 his master's in telecommunications, with emphasis on learning resources, from Ohio University. From 1972 to the present he was employed by Old Colony CATV in Providence as a consultant for education, government, and industry dealing with educational training programs.

THE COLLEGE AS Tricycles and tots, Leibniz and Locke (in spirit, at least) min-CONFERENCE CENTER gled on the campus last summer as the College accommodated a six-week Philosophy Institute sponsored by the Council for Philosophical Studies. Some 40 participants and their families from all over the United States convened at Bristol, settled into Residence Hall I, and took their meals in the Student Center. Guest lecturers from as far away as Europe and Australia came and went throughout the summer. All told, more than 150 people connected with the Institute either visited or lived at the College over the period July 15-August 23.

In August the College was host to three other residential groups: the Rhode Island Order of DeMolay, RIEA/NEA, and the Rhode Island College Housing Office. Each of these conferences lasted three days.

We hope to increase our share of the conference "market" next summer and, by means of a new flyer, are informing organizations in Rhode Island and neighboring states of the attractions at Bristol and in "The Ocean State." We would welcome suggestions of groups that may be seeking a conference site during June, July, or August.
