2011-2012 PRESIDENT'S REPORT

THE FACTS

COST:

“There is no issue that worries the American public more about higher education than the soaring cost of attending college.”

ISSUES IN SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY, SUMMER 2010

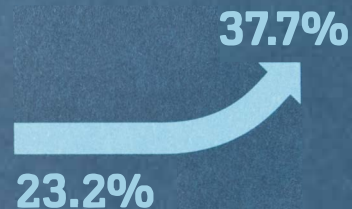

A STEEP 30-YEAR INCREASE IN TUITION

The rise in the cost of college tuition from 1978 to 2012 has significantly outpaced the increase in costs for medical expenses and food.

A GREATER SHARE

From 2001 to 2010, tuition as a percentage of median earnings increased from under a quarter to over a third of total annual income.

FEWER ENROLLED

The number of high school graduates is declining, and the percentage of accepted students who enroll in college is dropping precipitously. High costs and economic concerns are cited as primary reasons.

COST, DEBT AND JOBS

A CALL TO ACTION FOR AMERICAN HIGHER EDUCATION

To offer some context for the stories you are about to read in this President's Report, allow me to share a few facts on the “under siege” state in which higher education finds itself in 2012.

Less than three weeks before Election Day, the October 18 edition of TIME Magazine hit newsstands across America with a cover that would have been inconceivable just a few years ago – one blurb previewing the “Reinventing College” issue proclaimed, “Our Exclusive Poll: 80% Think College Isn't Worth the Money.”

Newsweek actually beat TIME to the punch, asking on its September 17 cover, “Is College a Lousy Investment?” The Economist called us out a few weeks earlier: “Four-year residential colleges cannot keep on forever raising their fees faster than the public's capacity to pay for them... Universities that fail to prepare for the hurricane ahead are likely to be flattened by it.”

Wow! Ten years ago, it would have been unthinkable for a news magazine to question the worth of a college degree. Of course there was concern about the rising cost of college, but we weren't seeing predictions of widespread institutional collapse, or references to “the hurricane ahead.” Is this real, or is this just journalists selling newspapers?

Having spent much time studying the topic over the past six months, I am forced to conclude that it is real – and that poses a genuine threat to higher education. Universities take justifiable pride in their collective longevity and stability, but when confronted by some external threat, our natural inclination is to go into hibernation while we wait for this latest storm to pass.

This time, I believe it's different. Too many forces are arrayed against us. For higher education to serve its very critical place in American society, our educational model must be reinvented – we need to maintain (ideally, increase) our quality while simultaneously making it more affordable, and therefore more accessible, for more Americans. A failure to do so will almost certainly lead to our nation's economic decline.

Central to everything are cost and debt. The increasing economic stratification of American society means there are a small number of prospective students who can afford to go to any university, and a growing number in danger of not being able to afford to go anywhere. It is not simply that the cost of higher education has been increasing faster than the cost of living – it is also that the median family income, in inflation-adjusted dollars, has been falling.

Value, of course, is the flip side of the cost and debt equation – and increasingly, the value of a university education is being seen as synonymous with the ability to obtain a relevant, well-paying job. Students, parents, employers – not to mention politicians – now expect that graduates will be able to do something of immediate use to their employers.

Yet since the recession of 2008-09 and continuing to the present, many college graduates are having a difficult time finding employment. Even when they do, they are often overqualified and undercompensated. Even if every new study points to the unquestionable long-term value of a college degree – and even in the current economy, better short-term job prospects than those without degrees – employment snapshots taken in the months following graduation often do not provide immediate validation of these statements.

So what does all this mean for Roger Williams? Is any single institution really capable of taking on such sweeping issues and offering real solutions without compromising its own institutional health? Perhaps not overnight, but in the absence of a significant economic rebound for the country and given the deep and abiding concerns of the public relating to cost, debt and job preparedness, I believe we have an obligation to tackle these issues head-on, in a dramatic and wide-ranging manner.

On October 24, in an address to the University faculty and staff, I shared details on Affordable Excellence at Roger Williams University – a comprehensive strategy that puts us on the right track to respond to these concerns. Parts of that strategy, including an undergraduate tuition freeze for 2013-14 and a four-year tuition guarantee, focus on addressing the very real concerns surrounding cost and debt.

Yet even more importantly, we are evolving and formalizing our value proposition – the very essence of what ensures that a Roger Williams University education is not interchangeable with what a student might receive at a college down the street. In two ways, we are spectacularly well positioned to educate graduates who are exceptionally well prepared to emerge job- or graduate school-ready.

First, we have more breadth of curriculum than just about any college of our size – half of our students study in liberal arts disciplines and half in professional programs. Imagine the benefit to students who maximize the opportunities that the RWU curriculum provides by building major/minor combinations that allow them to pursue their passions but complement them with skills from a completely different program. Perhaps a music major who recognizes the challenge of earning an income as a performer and adds a business minor – or a creative writing student who minors in engineering and equips herself with the skills for technical writing.

Yet beyond our diversity of programs, we are also committed to providing every student, regardless of major, at least one meaningful example of experiential, project-based learning that delivers the practical skills treasured by employers today. That might mean research with a faculty member in the sciences, a hands-on, relevant internship or engagement with real-world clients in one of the cross-disciplinary projects coordinated by our Community Partnerships Center, a phenomenally successful undertaking to date.

If jobs are one of the fundamental issues, we have the ability to create graduates who can get those jobs – and we can do this in ways that liberal arts colleges simply can't.

As you read the stories highlighted in this President's Report, you will find that despite the introduction of Affordable Excellence this fall, none of these ideas have just now been started from scratch – in fact, many have been strengths of our university for years. What we are doing today is expanding these concepts to be university-wide and integrating them into the very fabric of what we do each day at Roger Williams University.

America has stated clearly that it requires higher education to be better and more affordable. While our natural inclination may be to point to our centuries of collective success and wait out the storm, doing so will only prolong the inevitable – we need sustainable solutions, and we need them quickly.

Roger Williams University cannot single-handedly rectify the problems facing the entire higher education enterprise. But we can do the right thing by our own students and their families by controlling our costs, limiting debt, and ensuring that our graduates have the skills necessary not only to obtain well-paying jobs in a bleak economy, but also to lead successful and fulfilling lives in the years ahead.

Sincerely,
Donald J. Farish, Ph.D., J.D.
President

If the value of higher education is defined as better employment prospects and higher salaries, then an investment in college still pays.

COLLEGE EARNINGS PREMIUM OVER HIGH SCHOOL

Earnings of college graduates declined slightly during the recession, but held up during the recovery. On average, college graduates still earn nearly twice as much as high school graduates.

LOWER UNEMPLOYMENT AMONG COLLEGE GRADUATES

Unemployment rates for new four-year college graduates peaked at 11.1% in July 2011 before declining to 6.8% in May 2012. Meanwhile, unemployment rates for new high school graduates peaked at 30% in January 2010 and are still at 24% in May 2012.

Via the Community Partnerships Center, economic revitalization plans for Rhode Island's urban neighborhoods and real-world learning for Roger Williams students

IMAGINE IF UPON YOUR COLLEGE GRADUATION – before you'd even held a post-collegiate job – you could include the following on your list of accomplishments:

Identified and interviewed stakeholders, conducted field research and developed an action plan to revitalize the economy and preserve the heritage of the historic Washington Park neighborhood in Providence, R.I.

Oh, and delivered the result to local community leaders who now have the requisite information and a five-year strategic plan for turning the plan into reality.

For approximately 25 students in criminal justice, business and historic preservation who joined forces via the Community Partnerships Center at Roger Williams University in Spring 2012, that's precisely what their résumés will say.

And that's just the start. After a recent agreement with the Rhode Island Economic Development Corporation, additional student teams are hitting the streets to undertake similar urban revitalization efforts in Providence and Woonsocket, with the National Trust for Historic Preservation's proven Main Street program as their guide. It's an innovative approach to targeted economic development that will reap untold benefits for the communities, while also exposing students to real-world professional experiences.

"This project made the possibility of becoming a Main Street manager a real aspiration," says Tracy Jonsson '13M. "We have a very holistic historic preservation program and that's just one career path we might take, but many of us had never had direct exposure to it."

The boots hit the ground on Broad Street last spring as students walked the neighborhood, interviewed business owners and noted perceived threats to public safety – from graffiti to unsafe sidewalks. They reached out to community leaders, police and public officials, assessed market opportunities and analyzed the strength of the neighborhood's architecture and physical structures.

Next, the team presented a revitalization vision plan to business owners and residents, who built upon the ideas during a well-attended public forum. The students used the input to build a customized strategy on how to launch a nonprofit, community-led Main Street program – the first phase of a massive project, completed independently by students, which the community can now set into motion.

"The mission is to improve these neighborhoods," says preservation faculty member Jeremy Wells. "At the same time, students establish contacts that will serve them well in their careers and learn how the professional world works. By taking theory learned in other classes and applying it, they can see what works and what doesn't work."

Exactly the type of "real" experience that serves D.J. Sevigny '12M well in his new career as curator of Pawtucket's famed Slater Mill: "The most important aspect was being right on the front lines, working with real people – professionals who own small businesses," he says. "Having that exposure – not being in a theoretical situation, but one that is real and can be built upon – was an important experience."

Brayn Boza '12 played a brief, but invaluable role in the project, via Joel Cooper's Small Business Institute course, serving as a translator between his fellow students and Spanish-speaking residents in Washington Park. Even in those quick interactions, he learned a lot from the business owners.

"It prepared me for what a business owner's mindset is – day-to-day goals on how to keep a business running in this economy," Boza says. "I learned budgeting, good planning and marketing strategies for keeping a business going."

DESIGNING THE FUTURE

Architecture graduate students get top-notch career preparation, a foot in the door via SAAHP's Teaching Firm in Residence program

IT CAN BE DIFFICULT TO MEASURE THE SUCCESS of a new program. By what benchmark can performance be measured? If it is access to jobs, then there is little doubt that the Teaching Firm in Residence program at the School of Architecture, Art and Historic Preservation has proven an outstanding performer. Topping the list since the program's launch in 2007, Sasaki Associates has hired seven graduates – and provided internship experiences to many more.

Sasaki – the Boston-based international design firm responsible for the Olympic Green in Beijing and modernization of the Lincoln Memorial Landscape and Reflecting Pool in Washington, D.C., among countless others – has lent its architecture and design experts to RWU for the past five years.

Students learn about real architecture projects from the professionals who designed them, visit architecture firms and have their capstone design projects critiqued by dozens of diverse professionals from around the area.

“The career preparedness these students get is national quality, if not international quality – you’re learning from the best,” says Stephen White, dean of the School of Architecture, Art and Historic Preservation. “They get a balance of professional and academic experience.”

Roberto Viola Ochoa, a Sasaki associate who teaches the Comprehensive Design Studio (the “boot camp” of the master’s architecture program, he says), has two main tenets for budding architects: first, that a majority of the work is a collaborative effort, and second, that their projects impact the land on which they build. To help students “develop a sense of place” for their design prompts, he coordinates on-site visits to, among other locations, the Dharavi slum in Mumbai and Granada’s prestigious Alhambra, opening doors that would have been restricted to the students and connecting them with international design professionals.

“It was an absolute vital part of a complete education,” says Chris Hardy ’11M, who now works for Sasaki.

Students are also required to participate in gallery reviews at Sasaki’s headquarters, where they learn how to convey the ideas and process of their work to senior principals and junior practitioners from Sasaki and other renowned firms.

“Architecture students at RWU have the capacity to compete with the best students from all over the country,” Viola Ochoa says. But, he notes, Roger Williams lacks the brand caché of Harvard or Columbia. His mission is to promote the RWU program as much as possible:

“To be able to expose the students and show what they can do to a larger professional field is important to me.”

While Viola Ochoa is committed to the University as an adjunct professor, his colleagues Pablo Savid-Buteler and James Moses have contributed to teaching efforts in the Teaching Firm in Residence Studio. Sasaki designer Meredith McCarthy ’11M had the opportunity to work with the pair in 2009. She and her classmates collaborated on the University of Balamand, Lebanon, master plan; McCarthy independently designed an Institute of Peace for Balamand. Though group work can be challenging, she was glad to have had the experience.

“Working at Sasaki now, it’s clear that it’s very collaborative work. It’s a skill that’s really crucial to have in the real world, so starting to learn that is very important,” she says.

McCarthy says the breadth of what she learned from practitioners and the connections she made opened doors for her:

“It had a huge impact. I got a job one month after graduation in a terrible economy.”

Sasaki associate and RWU adjunct Roberto Viola Ochoa (center) stands with five of the seven Roger Williams graduates that Sasaki Associates has hired. Clockwise from bottom left: Chris Hardy ’11M; Meredith McCarthy ’11M; Jeanette Pastrana ’10M; Carolyn Brown ’10M; and Emily Goldenberg ’11M.

From Ann Beha Architects of Boston to Tangram Architects of Amsterdam to KLM Arquitectos of Buenos Aires, prestigious firms from all over the world lend their expertise to the architecture program, providing students the opportunity to collaborate on projects.

FROM CLASSROOM TO COURTROOM

RWU Law legal clinics provide practical experience, skills-training to transform students into lawyers

TIM GUMKOWSKI '06L DIDN'T ALWAYS ENVISION himself as a public defender. But when he left a lucrative career in the gourmet food and beverage industry for law school in 2003, he quickly realized that to be equally successful in the courtroom, classroom exercises wouldn't cut it—he would need as much practical, specified training as he could get his hands on.

"It wasn't something I had anticipated doing, but soon after I started law school I definitely figured out that I did not want to be sitting at a desk writing contracts," Gumkowski says. "I wanted to be involved, actively doing something that dealt with clients."

With a focus on public interest legal work—a specialty at RWU Law—Gumkowski enrolled in the Criminal Defense Clinic, a courtroom learning experience that provides law students the opportunity to represent real client cases in front of a judge, while under the supervision of a full-time faculty member.

"This is a very different mode of education, when you put a law student into the position where suddenly they are individually responsible for being a lawyer—not just watching some other lawyer, assisting them," says Associate Dean Andrew Horwitz, a former public defender who founded the Criminal Defense Clinic at the School of Law.

Gumkowski says that the clinic experience was unlike anything else he did in law school. He likens it to a professional position and lauds Horwitz's dedication to creating an environment that operates as such. The students have office space in downtown Providence, in close proximity to the district court where they sit in on arraignments. Once a student is assigned a case, the defendant is brought in for initial meetings and case conferences.

"It felt like you were doing something real as opposed to a simulation," he says.

For Gumkowski, who was invited to continue his work with the Criminal Defense Clinic for a second year, one case was particularly memorable. In his final year of law school, Gumkowski tried a domestic assault case before a jury and judge

Law Clinics in Practice

Clinical programs are a cornerstone of the RWU Law experience, providing academic credit to students representing actual clients under the supervision of a full-time faculty member. The School of Law hosts three legal clinics: the Criminal Defense Clinic, the Immigration Clinic and the Mediation Clinic. Students in the Criminal Defense Clinic serve as public defenders; those participating in the Immigration Clinic work with local community organizations serving individuals who have immigrated to Rhode Island; and Mediation Clinic participants hone their conflict-resolution skills working with actual clients.

"It's a very exciting mode of education," says Associate Dean Andrew Horwitz. "It's a really transformational educational opportunity for most law students."

PUTTING THEORY INTO PRACTICE

In their final year, Jessica Grimes '10L and Ashley Ham Pong '10L (above) scored a spectacular victory in the case of a Liberian refugee being threatened with deportation. They successfully argued at trial that the 27-year-old student would very likely be subject to ethnic persecution should he be sent back to Liberia. Ham Pong credits the clinical experience for helping turn classroom theory into courtroom victory. "The hands-on practice I got really familiarized me with the immigration system," she says.

Today, Ham Pong is managing attorney at the Capital Area Immigrants' Rights Coalition in Washington, D.C., and Grimes is an attorney advisor with the Department of Justice Executive Office for Immigration Review.

A LAWYER FOR LIFE

According to Associate Dean Horwitz, Akin Adepoju '07L "came into the clinical setting with a lot of raw talent—really dynamic, outgoing, smart and great with people. What we worked on together was how much you could ride that and how much you had to work to deeply apply yourself."

Just 18 months after graduating from RWU Law, Adepoju was handling capital cases as an attorney with the Fair Trial Initiative, providing legal service to indigent defendants facing the death penalty. In his first case, he rescued a client from death row.

Today, Adepoju serves as a staff attorney for the Office of the Federal Defender for the District of Pennsylvania in both the trial unit and the capital habeas corpus unit. He is the 2012 recipient of the RWU Law Feinstein Institute for Legal Service Public Interest Alumni Award.

in superior court. It was a two-day trial, and the client was acquitted. It was the first time that a law student had argued a juried case in the State of Rhode Island.

"The training and everything Professor Horwitz did at the clinic I still take with me every day," says Gumkowski, who is now an attorney at Brooklyn Defender Services, one of the nation's most renowned public defender offices. "That experience puts you much further along in the game. Having been in court, having represented the client, having built relationship skills and trial skills—it is essential."

It's experience he values in the hiring process, too, citing the practical experience students gain from clinical work as a key criterion in narrowing down the thousands of applicants he vets. It's part of what made him employable upon graduation in 2006, he says: "I felt that I had the basic building blocks to go out there and apply for jobs and feel confident applying for them. I felt like if I was given the opportunity, I would have what I needed to hit the ground running."

"I felt that I had the basic building blocks to go out there and apply for jobs and feel confident applying for them. I felt like if I was given the opportunity, I would have what I needed to hit the ground running."

A MAJOR (AND MINOR) DECISION

From liberal arts to professional programs, RWU students combine passion and practicality

ABBY MOREAU '13

Major: Economics

Minor: English Literature

"I don't think a lot of business majors realize how important it is to have a background in English," says senior Abby Moreau. "It's useful in helping to create dialogue."

Moreau, who has completed an internship at On an Inhale – a wellness startup launched by alumna Kendall Covitz '10 – and is currently working with Providence-based women's lingerie startup Dear Kate, never envisioned a traditional career for herself. "Sitting behind a desk crunching numbers is my worst nightmare!" she says. Perhaps that's why the non-traditional combination of economics and English suits her.

"I like my economics degree. I'm glad that I did it and it gives me a solid background for business. But now that I'm doing more social media and blogging working with startups, I realize how important it is to have an English background. And while I'm not writing formally, it's helping me to create this dialogue that has become a big part of business that people are tapping into."

While fewer business students have the "writing chops" to get ahead in the professional world, Moreau believes that strong writing skills can be a differentiator in the job hunt.

"We have to find a way to create a language and create a conversation with the customer that is going to be cohesive to our brand."

MARY ROONEY '14

Major: Public Relations

Minor: e-Business; Film and Animation

For Mary Rooney, the key to success is being willing to put in the work – even if that means waking up at 5:30 every morning to make it to your internship on time.

"Take as many internships as you can find!" is her best advice.

"I'm on my third and I'm only a junior," says Rooney, who currently interns for local cable talk show "The Rhode Show."

A self-described hands-on learner, Rooney added the e-business minor at the behest of her faculty advisor, Assistant Professor of Communication Amiee Shelton. The courses required for the minor (which includes a combination of marketing and web development courses) are providing her applicable skill sets like how to build websites, create targeted ads for internet marketing and manage marketing campaigns using web analytics and search engine optimization.

Believe it or not, Rooney says with a chuckle, "What you learn in class does actually apply!"

She applauds the practical approach of many of her courses, from PR Tactics, where she learned to write news releases, to Digital Journalism, where she is honing her skills behind the camera.

"Dr. Shelton always tells me, 'if you want something, you have to go after it.' She has really taught me how to be determined."

"You can only learn so much from textbooks, and studying architecture like the Duomo – I could draw the plan for you no problem, but actually going there and seeing it in context and being inside of it – it almost seems surreal. Everything I learned in history books came to life."

DEV LEWIS '13

Major: International Relations
Minor: Economics; Mandarin

As a young student in Mumbai, India, Dev Lewis was fascinated with the larger world and how countries interact with each other. So when he landed at Roger Williams University in Fall 2009, it was a foregone conclusion that he would study international relations. It wasn't until he enrolled in the program, however, that the world of economics (and a world driven by economics) opened up to him.

"International relations is a very broad field for people who have broad ideas," he says. "Economics gave me a sharper focus in the broad sea of international relations."

Lewis also enrolled in Mandarin courses as a freshman. "I was focused on what skills I could gain to make myself different from everyone else," he says. He added it as a minor and spent seven months studying and working in China, from Shanghai to the Sichuan province.

"You can't be a specialist in a region if you don't know the language, if you haven't been there," Lewis says. Understanding Mandarin helped him land a job writing about India/China relations for Guancha Zhe (The Observer), which Lewis calls China's version of The Economist. He's also been working remotely with the Mumbai-based startup consultancy Inchin Closer, a firm focused on bridging the gap between India and China.

While graduate school is in the future, Lewis is considering a return to Shanghai for a year to work, build his network and sharpen his language skills.

"The job market is difficult, particularly in the U.S.," Lewis says. "The job market has never been more international. Students should be prepared to look internationally for jobs."

JILLIAN WOODWORTH HOPKE '02

Major: Marketing
Minor: Dance Performance

"It just kind of happened naturally," says Jillian Woodworth Hopke '02 of her decision to minor in dance performance. "I had been performing for as long as I could remember. When I started at RWU I was only taking business classes. I sought out the minor to fill the missing piece of my college experience."

An opportunity to perform at Disney World before her senior year earned Hopke an audition for a full-time gig, but she decided to finish her degree. Still, the performance world beckoned and after stopovers in radiology and business advising, she danced her way back to Disney and spent six years as a parade performer. There she learned the business side of entertainment, leading to her latest role – entertainment specialist at LEGOLAND, where she writes, produces and directs all of the amusement park's creative programming.

But perhaps the biggest performance of Hopke's career came when her personal business project, Jillycakes, landed a coveted spot on the Food Network's baking competition, "Cupcake Wars." Her team won, and fans have voted for Jillycakes to compete on the show's upcoming All-Star edition.

For Hopke, a marketing and dance performance degree was a recipe for success.

"I think it's invaluable," she says. "Every major everywhere should have to go through business ethics. The way you run your business says a lot about yourself. It's all about building this brand image for yourself. That's where my business degree has helped me the most – how do I want to brand myself, how do I want others to perceive Jillycakes and me personally?"

"Every bit of where I am right now has been completely unexpected, but I'm embracing it wholeheartedly."

JESSICA BETANCUR '13

Major: Accounting
Minor: Psychology

You could say that Jessica Betancur was, like many students, undecided when it came to choosing a major. With an eye on law, she took courses in legal studies and psychology before landing in the Mario J. Gabelli School of Business and declaring her major in accounting.

A first-generation college student from North Providence, Betancur describes herself as practical and says that the Intercultural Leadership Award – a four-year, full-tuition scholarship – was the sole reason why she was able to attend RWU. Trying to finance a law degree, she says, is impractical – so her route to law school will include a stop at a major accounting firm where she will build her business acumen (and, hopefully, her savings) to pursue graduate study in the future.

To prepare herself, Betancur has completed two internships at Deloitte & Touche in both the marketing and audit departments. There, she says, she gained the intangible skills that complement her classroom learning.

"I was able to learn skill sets like how to navigate the workplace and increase my program-specific skills, like Excel," she says.

While she's still surprised how much she enjoys accounting – particularly tax! – Betancur is confident that combining accounting and psychology will prepare her for employment after graduation.

"I had to choose between something I loved and something that would help me support my family," she says. "This combination let me major in something practical and minor in something I love."

KENNY ERMANN '12

Major: Construction Management
Minor: Business Studies

"I always wanted to work for Disney. That was one of my dreams," says Kenny Ermann '12. "I actually wrote my college admission essay about wanting to work for them."

Mission accomplished.

In his final semester of college – while many of his peers were celebrating the impending end of campus life – Ermann was just outside Orlando, Fla., getting to work on a slightly larger campus as an intern at the Walt Disney World Resort. While there, Ermann worked on the Disney's Art of Animation Resort – a 2,000-room resort themed around the Disney-Pixar movies "Finding Nemo" and "Cars," and the Disney classics "The Little Mermaid" and "The Lion King" – ensuring that the contractors adhered to all of Disney's requirements.

"The main goal was to represent the operator and make sure all design guidelines lived up to the Disney standard," he says.

The fact that Roger Williams requires all construction management students to minor in business studies also put him ahead of many new employees, Ermann notes, particularly when it comes to communication and collaboration:

"Some of the biggest benefits come from being able to communicate effectively. The business minor and writing classes we're required to take are a huge benefit."

After completing his internship (and graduation), Ermann was invited to stay on with Disney. "You just take one step in the park and see that kid who is meeting Mickey for the first time and the magic you helped create – that's why we do it."

REPORTING FROM THE RAINFOREST

In the heart of the Amazon jungle, students combine journalism and anthropology to hone storytelling skills in unfamiliar territory

DEEP IN AMAZONIA WITH NOTHING MORE THAN multimedia tools, a translator and a bit of background, a group of Roger Williams University students set out last summer to unearth the untold stories of labor opportunities, human rights issues, deforestation and urbanization—all from within a squatter settlement in Brazil.

Led by Assistant Professor of Journalism Paola Prado and Assistant Professor of Anthropology Jeremy Campbell, the students traveled to the jungle for a new study-abroad course, “Environmental Justice in Brazil.” The course combined journalism and anthropology to provide students with a true field reporting experience, while learning about the impact of jobs and the economy on social justice and environmental change.

“We had them report real stories. It doesn’t get much more real than jumping into the Amazon and finding out the current is too swift,” says Prado, who noted that students had to traverse a difficult physical and cultural landscape that included passing police officers guarding American-owned farms to witnessing the effects of environmental change on the Amazon River.

Both faculty members assert that such a hands-on approach builds invaluable skills that will make the students stand out to potential employers.

“These students have communication skills that far outpace many of their peers at the end of this course,” Campbell says.

The art of listening and time management were key takeaways for senior journalism major Jolyn Wiggin.

“It was incredibly hard to balance two courses and do all the work well,” she says, noting that she quickly learned the importance of prioritizing her work. All of these skills have bolstered her résumé, she says.

But it wasn’t just academic work that opened students’ eyes. A service learning component partnered the students with village laborers to build a community center. At the end of each workday, students bonded with the laborers and village schoolchildren via sports.

“Even though we couldn’t communicate, we could play volleyball and a little soccer and have a great time together and laugh over silly things,” says junior anthropology and sociology major Victoria Mordasky, who describes the experience as transformative.

“What I learned there about sustainability and environmental justice changed my priorities and flipped my world upside down. I’m thankful for what I have and for being able to travel to Brazil.”

WEAVING REAL WORLD WEB SOLUTIONS

Faculty member and students combine to compete for clients' business in innovative web development course

IT MAY LOOK LIKE A TRADITIONAL CLASS, WITH a professor and students working in groups in a computer lab, but Professor Alan Cutting's Web Development Center is anything but traditional.

Cutting, who teaches web development, takes on the role of company supervisor in a project-based learning course he developed that pits student teams against one another in creating website solutions for real clients. He obtains the client, chooses team leaders and oversees their work, providing feedback and guidance as necessary. Team leaders review student résumés and assemble teams of graphic designers, programmers and marketing specialists; they meet with the client to determine their needs, then develop and present

"Students learn quickly that they must be able to explain each design decision – whether strategic, graphic, content or technical – and that they must be able to do so in the language of the client. That's totally different than explaining your rationale to your professor or to another expert in your field. It's also an experience that would be impossible to duplicate in a traditional classroom environment."

– ALAN CUTTING,
PROFESSOR OF COMPUTER INFORMATION SYSTEMS

their ideas, making tweaks (or entirely changing direction) based on the client's reaction. It's a student-faculty collaboration on every level but one – who chooses the winning design:

"These teams compete for the client's business, just as real design firms must do in the real-world marketplace," Cutting says. "The client, not the professor, selects the winning team."

When presented with the Spring 2011 client, the Bristol County Water Authority, Kelly Shouse says her team scheduled additional client meetings outside of the classroom, which helped them extract exactly what BCWA desired in a website. More transparency for ratepayers was the key, says Shouse, a web development major. Her team's winning website included a content management system to enable posting of company reports, as well as a link to a payment portal for ratepayers to make online bill payments.

"You couldn't have asked for a more realistic 'working-world' experience," Shouse says. "This can all be a bit overwhelming, but it is exactly what you face in the real world." Shouse would know – she has worked as a programmer for General Physics in Middletown, R.I., for 16 years.

For senior Courtney Way, who is double majoring in graphic design and web development, project-based learning was a big departure from lecture-driven courses.

"You're actually working with a client," Way says. "You can't apply just any design. You have to go by what they're looking for."

Way's team created the website chosen by the Spring 2012 client, Greenlock Therapeutic Riding Center, with few guidelines from which to work. Their final design was a clean, easy-to-use site with low maintenance for the client, including a mobile site for smartphone users. But arriving at that result took a lot of hard work and listening to the client – as well as an early misstep.

When first pitching their design inspirations to Greenlock, Way's team presented the flashy website of another riding center. They thought they were going to "blow the socks off" the client, Cutting says.

"You could have heard a pin drop when it flashed up on the screen," he says. "After a pause, in a quiet voice, they simply said, 'That's not us. Not us at all.' How would you duplicate that experience in a traditional classroom?"

STUDENT-FACULTY COLLABORATIONS ACROSS CAMPUS – AND BEYOND

Student-faculty collaborations are a hallmark of RWU learning, providing undergraduates with hands-on directed study in the classroom and the community. Opportunities range from traditional lab science research to creative publications and shared study abroad scholarship. Here are just a few examples:

SAVING THE SCALLOPS

Thanks to funding from the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Association, the Marine and Natural Sciences division has partnered with Save The Bay to implement a bay scallop restoration program.

IN PARASITES, PRESTIGE

Thanks to a fellowship from the American Society for Microbiology, senior Andrew Mitchell will work alongside Associate Professor Avelina Espinosa to study an intestinal parasite responsible for thousands of deaths worldwide.

UNEARTHING ANTHROPOLOGY RESEARCH

Launched two years ago, the digital publication "Journal of Undergraduate Ethnography" is run by a student editorial board that publishes high-quality undergraduate ethnography research with guidance from editor-in-chief and Associate Professor of Anthropology Jason Patch.

REMOTE LEARNING

Professor of Engineering Matthew Stein and senior Sean Damico are designing a robot that simulates a hands-on laboratory work experience for a remote operator.

WRITING THE BOOK ON WORLD ARTS

Associate Professor of Art and Architectural History Rebecca Leuchak and graduate students Kristine Delino and Nicole Duperré are writing a textbook with a new vision for teaching world arts – looking at culture through major works of art and architecture.

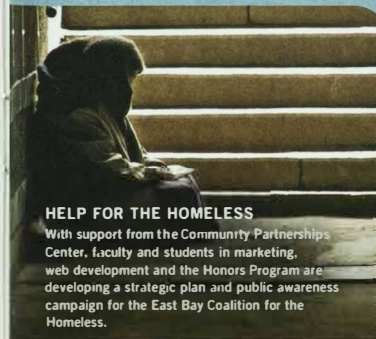

"Here at RWU, a student who works closely with a professor has the opportunity to participate in experiences that they might not otherwise get someplace else."

– AUTUMN QUEZADA-GRANT,
ASSISTANT PROFESSOR OF HISTORY

TECHNO/DANCE

Recent dance and performance studies graduates Michelle Birmingham '12, Ali Burke '12 and Leanne Smith '12 worked with Professor of Dance Gary Shore to write, choreograph and perform a piece satirizing technology's effect on society.

HELP FOR THE HOMELESS

With support from the Community Partnerships Center, faculty and students in marketing, web development and the Honors Program are developing a strategic plan and public awareness campaign for the East Bay Coalition for the Homeless.

TO TUNISIA, TOGETHER

While not a traditional collaboration, Assistant Professor of History Autumn Quezada-Grant and senior history major Emily Masseo engaged in a shared learning experience when they traveled to Tunisia for the Summer School on Democracy and Transitional Justice at the University of Sousse.

“With early greetings from Hurricane Irene to a Commencement Day send-off by Madeleine Albright, the 2011-12 academic year at Roger Williams offered few humdrum moments. From the Community Partnerships Center launch to the 25th anniversary of the Barn to our first President’s Distinguished Speakers Series events, the RWU family enjoyed an academic year both memorable and productive.”

—DONALD J. FARISH, PRESIDENT

YEAR IN REVIEW

Campus highlights and activities from the 2011-12 academic year

2011 ■ JULY 4
RWU Orientation Advisors' float earns the coveted Bristol Fourth of July Parade Best in Parade Award, recognizing its all-American theme, "Oh, the sites that you'll see..."

JULY 11
The newly launched Community Partnerships Center dives into early projects (the Walley School in Bristol, Le Moulin in Woonsocket) and issues a survey to assess the needs of prospective community partners.

SEPTEMBER 6-12
During a weeklong commemoration of the 10th anniversary of September 11, former U.S. Poet Laureate Billy Collins reads some of his work (above) and U.S. Senator Jack Reed (D-R.I.) attends memorial events on campus.

SEPTEMBER 16
The University officially launches two new websites: the refresh of University website RWU.edu, and PDQ@RWU, a one-stop site for news, features and events.

SEPTEMBER 16
A gift from Brian Ali '06L establishes the Professor Anthony J. Santoro Business Law Lecture Series Endowment in honor of his mentor and founding dean of the School of Law.

SEPTEMBER 16
For the first time in RWU history, the engineering program is named to the U.S. News & World Report 2011 "Best in Undergraduate Engineering" list.

OCTOBER 12
Civil rights activist, Congressman and U.S. Ambassador Andrew Young speaks at RWU, inviting students to turn today's challenges into tomorrow's opportunities.

OCTOBER 12
Art lovers rejoice at the advent of Art on Campus, a new program that showcases faculty and student artwork and installations across campus.

OCTOBER 13
Donald J. Farish is officially sworn in as the 10th President of Roger Williams University during an inauguration ceremony on campus.

OCTOBER 14
RWU's School of Education hosts "Putting Equity into Action: A Conference for Urban Educators," featuring renowned education theorist Pedro Noguera.

OCTOBER 21-23
Hawks spirit soars at Homecoming and Family Weekend, an annual celebration that includes alumni athletics competitions, St. Baldrick's Day Fundraiser, a 5K race, Autumn Festival, King and Queen Coronation and much more.

NOVEMBER 30
The sailing team celebrates their 2011 Team Racing National Championship with a reception and Ring Ceremony.

DECEMBER 15
The University honors the 25th anniversary of The Barn Performing Arts Center with a celebration showcasing the building's unique history and original performances featuring former faculty members Bill Grandgeorge and Kevin Jordan.

2012 ■ JANUARY 14
RWU hosts nearly 500 elementary and middle school students competing as teams in the 2012 FIRST LEGO League Robotics Tournament. The winning team received $200,000 in RWU scholarships.

JANUARY 19
The Mario J. Gabelli School of Business receives reaccreditation from AACSB International, a distinction bestowed upon less than five percent of business programs around the world.

FEBRUARY 8
The University launches a partnership with Zipcar, Inc. to offer car-sharing on campus as a convenient, cost-effective and environmentally friendly alternative to owning a car.

MARCH 27
Acclaimed author and former New York Times science writer Dava Sobel kicks off the President's Distinguished Speakers Series at RWU, which includes master classes for communication majors.

MARCH 28
More than 80 employers from across the region, including construction and architectural firms, financial institutions, nonprofits and more, turn out to the first Career Day, an event that builds on the tradition of the annual Career Fair.

APRIL 23
The Open Door Report, an annual publication of the Institute of International Education, cites RWU in two categories for promoting study abroad programs – a first for the University.

APRIL 30
Accomplished Mills College administrator and faculty member Andrew A. Workman, Ph.D., joins RWU as provost and senior vice president.

MAY 19
The Honorable Madeleine K. Albright, the 64th U.S. Secretary of State, urges graduates to inspire change in her Commencement address to the Class of 2012.

JUNE 12
The Fund for Civic Activities reaches $106,326 in grants awarded to more than 70 local projects and initiatives since 2007.

Corporate Scholars
 Program co-chair
 Charlie Coelho '96
 and President
 Parish with the 2011
 Student Scholars.

On October 18, 2011, President Parish hosted a reception to thank the University's corporate and small business donors for their generous support of the Corporate Scholars Program. This program provides vital tuition relief for students receiving financial aid.

This past spring, 86 alumni returned to campus for RWU's first-ever Career Day. Alumni lent their expertise to 15 professional and industry panels, sharing their personal perspectives and advice with RWU students regarding the experience and skill sets that today's employers demand. Career conversations ranged from strategic networking to résumé building to effective interview techniques.

Rich Nassaney '93 speaks with students in the Mario J. Gabeli School of Business about pursuing entrepreneurial careers.

This past spring, 86 alumni returned to campus for RWU's first-ever Career Day. Alumni lent their expertise to 15 professional and industry panels, sharing their personal perspectives and advice with RWU students regarding the experience and skill sets that today's employers demand. Career conversations ranged from strategic networking to resumé building to effective interview techniques.

Rich Nassaney '93 speaks with students in the Mario J. Gabelli School of Business.

MISSION & CORE VALUES

Roger Williams University is an independent university that combines the unique strengths of small liberal arts colleges and those of larger comprehensive universities where liberal and professional education are enhanced by their integration and the recognition of their unity.

At the foundation of the institution is a set of core values that play a central role in guiding a respectful, diverse and intellectually vibrant university community:

- ▶ Love of learning as an intrinsic value
- ▶ Preparation for careers and future study
- ▶ Collaboration of students and faculty in research
- ▶ Commitment to community through service and sustainability
- ▶ Appreciation of global perspectives
- ▶ Promotion of civil discourse

EXCELLENCE
at ROGER WILLIAMS UNIVERSITY

America has stated very clearly that it requires colleges and universities to be both more effective and more affordable. In October 2012, Roger Williams University launched the Affordable Excellence initiative, a comprehensive strategy for confronting the most pressing challenges facing higher education – increasing costs that limit access to college; rising student and family debt; and the job readiness of graduates.
