Here is a brief summary of the contents:

- Two thousand students were randomly selected to take an American College Health and Wellness survey earlier this semester, about 28 percent of whom completed it. This is a slight increase in response as compared to previous years, when the survey was administered on paper in the classroom to all undergraduate University students.
- The number of students who completed the survey since it last went out has gone up by two percent. It is also the first year that the participants were offered prizes. Of the 569 students who completed the survey, 24 were randomly selected to receive prizes, according to Darnell Darnody, Director of Health Education.
- "It’s less [participation] than we got in the written one, but we surveyed less people. In the written one, we survey about 3,500 people ... and we get 900 or 800 [responses],” Darnody said.

Mrs. Farish said that she had published previously, and how captivating she found his story to be. The most unique aspect about Sobel novel is that the majority of its fiction: it contains a completely fictionalized play, penned by Sobel, about the conversation that continued Copernicus to publish his book at long last. The play provides an extensive glimpse into Copernicus's life prior to the conversation that would revolutionize the world in ways he had never lived to see. "I thought, what an amazing situation...he was convinced to do what he had avoided for a lifetime," Sobel said during her address.

In fact, Sobel found herself in a situation similar to Copernicus regarding the novel of which he was the author. "I initially had the idea [for the play] in 1973," Sobel said. "I thought about the play for several months, but I was young then, and didn't have the courage to do it." Sobel says she was influenced to write the play by her background; she holds a Bachelor of Arts degree in Theater History, from the State University of New York at Binghamton.

It was not until 2003, when a colleague had read her manuscript written about Copernicus, that the idea materialized. Sobel had read, "At the same time, her son was attending school for theater. Soon, Sobel found her desire to retell Copernicus's story rekindled anew. "One of the nice things about getting older is you get a little bolder," Sobel told the audience. "I was ready for a challenge." In the years before she finally continued to telling Copernicus's tale, Sobel kept herself quite busy, authoring five books, co-authoring another six, and writing for a slew of magazines, including a visit spent working for the New York Times Science Times. She even spent a week attending camp in Alabama. "I'm very fortunate to be able to do what I do. You go from day to day doing what I enjoy doing as a lifetime achievement," Sobel said. "It was as though that [Sobel] agreed to speak with Mrs. Farish, "I'm one of the highlights of college," so have such creative thinkers come.

Details revealed about Bayside remodeling

LEONARD BURNS

Sports Manager

The Bayside Courts at Roger Williams University are undergoing construction during the summer of 2012. The need for construction is due to the current siding, failing to properly weatherproof the residence halls' exterior. Tully, Capitol Projects Manager, said, "Bayside, built in 1996, is experiencing water infiltration of the existing Exterior Insulated Finish System (EIFS) envelope, Tully said. According to Tully, EIFS is a barrier system that relies on the outer surface of the building to prevent moisture from entering. Historically, EIFS systems are plagued by installation issues that result in water infiltration, which has been determined to be a defect in Bayside Courts."

Tully said. "The purpose of the Bayside project will be about $2.5 million per unit, replacing all siding, windows, and the roof." According to Tony Montefusco, Director of Housing. In response to the cost of the project, Tully said, "It was determined that the cement siding would provide the best exterior surface of the building to weatherproof and architectural appropriateness." Matt Hoff, a junior who will be moving into Bayside residence fall, said he supported the reconstruction project. "I think the project is worth the money because it's important for the building to be functional as well as look good and to prevent students," Hoff said.

Currently, there is a mock-up in front of the "Whitecap" Bayside apartments, giving students and faculty an idea of what the future of the Bayside apartments will look like. A mock-up contrast with Bayside's current weathered facade. According to Tully, the design mock-up felt that the consideration of the village feel. Bayside's location along the waterfront, forested slopes, and roof line supported a New England colonial verification."

PROVOST: Six candidates to arrive for interviews open to students

To finish, the Provost Search Committee began its search for a permanent replacement at the University. The Provost Search Committee, which is comprised of at least one representative from each of the schools within the University, selected six candidates for the position. Farish said. "We've been preparing to begin work at the University as early as July in order to prepare for the coming semester. On March 22, the candidates began a series of two-day visits to the University, and will continue to do so through April 10. After each of the candidates' respective visits, members of the University community who wish to participate will be given a "short survey form... where students will be asked along with anybody else. What do you think of this person?" Farish said. "We're updating the search committee at the end of every candidate's visit, so it's very important feedback," Farish said.

"The search committee will collect that information and assemble it, and include it as part of their report to me, but also will be influenced as they see what the people are saying." No voice is to be ignored in the search for the new provost, Farish said. Farish said he hopes to have a high amount of community involvement in this decision because the provost oversees the entire academic area. The provost is the chief academic officer of the University, responsible for the dean. The dean reports to the provost, the provost reports to the president, and the president serves as the chief executive officer. Although students do not deal directly with the provost, Farish noted that it is important for them to have the opportunity to meet the candidates and see how this decision affects them. Farish also noted that this is an opportunity for the whole community to decide, "Is that a person you would like to see working in a very senior position on our campus?" According to Farish, "Students are much more prone to meeting with the department chairpersons and deans than they would with the provost directly." The faculty in turn meets with the provost directly, rather than other administrative officials, according to Randall Van Schepen, Chair of the CORE Curriculum Revision Committee. "One thing the provost can provide as the leader of the academic life of campus is to be an advocate for the faculty's voice about what's going on in the curriculum to the administration," Van Schepen said.

Each candidate will participate in an open forum as part of his or her two-day visit to campus. Farish said that he encourages as many community members as possible to attend. "This is a pretty important decision," Farish said. "It's not just we're interviewing the candidates. They effectively are all people on campus who are interested in the selection of the provost. They are interviewing us as well as us interviewing them. We're trying to determine whether this is the place that they want to be."

Bridge inspectors discovered the dislodged stone last fall.

They may look bad, but a massive granite stone that has fallen from place at the base of the Mount Hope Bridge's south tower is not cause for alarm, bridge engineers say.

Bridge inspectors discovered the dislodged stone last fall and "determined that it was not a structural problem," said David Darlington, chairman of the Rhode Island Turnpike and Bridge Authority when asked about it on Monday.

"There is no risk to the bridge or the motorists," he said. Had the engineers thought otherwise, repairs would have been made immediately.

The engineers say the stone likely came loose due to "wave action of the concrete that supports it. Plans are to push it in place with a fresh bed of support concrete. The damage is clearly visible," said Darlington.

At approximately 6:26 p.m. on Saturday, March 10, Barrington police received a report of an erratic operator driving a white Ford Explorer on Warren County Road near the Barrington Falls Outdoor Learning Center. The driver of the vehicle, Layne C. Savage, 31, of 49 St., Elizabeth St., Apt. 2, Braided, allegedly had bloodshot eyes and slurred speech.

Savage reportedly would not perform field sobriety tests or take a breathalyzer. Police allegedly found partially empty wine containers in the vehicle along with partially empty liquor containers. She was charged with driving under the influence of alcohol or drugs, in addition to the misdemeanor charge of driving with a suspended or revoked driver's license.

According to her website, Ms. Savage is an attorney who specializes in defending people who have been charged with DUI.

Evidence suggests economic upswing could be coming

NATIONAL NEWS

A third-straight month of large employment gains brought back familiar feelings of hope for an economic recovery. According to the U.S. Labor Department in February of this year, 227,000 jobs were added to the economy. This increase was larger than expected.

The December and January employment reports revealed a revision that showed an increase of 67,000 jobs. For more, this is evidence that the economy is heading towards a state of well-being once being.

In fact, this was the 57th month in a row that employment increased, and the third straight month in which more than 200,000 jobs were added to the economy. This brought the total increase of private-sector jobs to 3.9 million in the past two years.

Nevertheless, unemployment remained at 8.3 percent. Yet this could be attributed to the nearly half a million workers who reported the work force during this interval. The question at hand now appears to be whether the economy is unsustainably recovering, or just temporarily looking healthy.

While President Obama welcomed the surge in hiring, saying, "There are better days ahead, our job now is to keep this economic engine churning," not everyone was expressing this sentiment.

Jon Hilsenrath in The Wall Street Journal questioned, "Is the economic engine churning, is the new household creation going to get jobs and move out, a spike in demand for housing and its related furnishings can be expected. The creation of new households could create a "virtuous cycle" that could really get the economy back on its feet. As the election draws closer, the state of the economy's recovery will become increasingly important for the candidates. Clearly, the decline of the unemployment rate is beneficial to President Obama's re-election campaign, and, if recovery continues, both will be felt for his challenges to reconcile as modeling. Meaning, if the economy continues to prosper and unemployment continues to fall, Obama's adversaries will only be able to say that they could have provided a faster recovery, rather than provide a recovery. If the economy takes a turn for the worse, though, it may be quite detrimental to Obama's campaign. Thus, the rate of economic recovery at the time of election will be quite a significant point of determination between the candidates. Additional reporting by Tim White.
The time she told me she wanted to go to Australia was back in September. She said she had signed up and needed help with the application process that she had wanted to go once her freshman year and had been counting down the days until she was supposed to apply. What I was supposed to say to that? I couldn’t exactly tell her yes, but then again, we only had been dating for three months. And now, “Oh yeah, by the way, I’m going abroad next semester?” I didn’t like the idea, nor do I like it now, but I supported her and helped her fill out her papers.

The response took about two months, and when she finally got accepted, I could see the excitement in her eyes, fur away. “I wasn’t sure exactly finally got accepted, I could fill out her papers. Hawks humbled during training trip

JOS~ W EINSE R

The Boston Globe

After many seasons with the long-time Colts quarterback Peyton Manning signing with the Denver Broncos last week, there was a lot of talk about what to expect from the upcoming season due to his recent neck surgery. The move has been controversial with some believing it was the right decision for both teams.

The move is one that has been anticipated for several seasons, but largely due to the lack of success the Colts have had in recent years. Despite the fact that they have some of the most talented players in the league, they have struggled to put it all together on the field.

The move is a testament to Manning's talent and his ability to lead a team to victory. It's also a testament to the trust that the Broncos have in him to be able to lead them to success.

For Manning, this is a new chapter in his career. He has been a part of the Colts for many years, but now he gets a chance to start fresh and prove what he can do in a new system.

Manning is one of the greatest quarterbacks of all time and has earned many accolades throughout his career. He is a six-time Super Bowl champion and has been named the NFL's MVP three times.

For the Broncos, this is a huge move and one that will have a major impact on the team. They have a chance to win a Super Bowl and make history.

For Manning, this is a chance to prove that he can still play at a high level and lead a team to success.

It's a new chapter in his career and one that he's excited about.

Profile of a Hawk: Tennis player Jason Pacino

JASON PACINO Serves as a Deuce

Jason Pacino is the first RWU Hawk to make it on the tennis team since 2010. He will be attending the University of South Carolina this fall.

Pacino has been playing tennis since he was 5 years old. His father introduced him to the sport and encouraged him to give it a try.

He has been playing tennis for many years and has been a regular at the Dunmore Country Club.

For Pacino, tennis is not just a sport, but a way of life. He enjoys the intense competition and the physical challenge.

For the Hawks, Pacino is a valuable asset. He has been a consistent performer and has helped the team improve their play.

Pacino is a leader on the team and is well-respected by his teammates. He is known for his intense focus and his ability to play well under pressure.

He is looking forward to the next season and is excited to see what the team can accomplish.

JOS~ W EINSE R

Weather continues to be a topic of discussion for the Hawks as they prepare for the upcoming season.

New coach named

The New Rome High School baseball and softball teams have a new coach for the upcoming season. The new coach is Jeep Somera, who has been named the new head coach for both programs.

Somera is a former player and coach at the school and has been involved with the program for many years.

He has a wealth of experience and is well-respected by the players and the community.

Somera is looking forward to the new season and is excited to work with the team.

Jets roll out runway for polarizing quarterback

The New York Jets have released their 2010 draft picks and have focused on strengthening their defense.

The team has added several players who can make an impact on the field. They have focused on bringing in players who can help them win games.

The Jets have also focused on improving their special teams, which have been a weakness in recent years.

The team is looking to make a statement this season and is hoping to improve on their 6-10 record from last year.

The judges noted their impressions in the center of the stage and lifted their scores toward the camera, the audience cheering in anticipation. They were here to see if they believed what they were being told.

As expected, the team was ready. In a straight line, from front to back, the girls didn’t look a day older. All dressed up and with hair styled perfectly, they were ready to take the stage.

Something for all majors: 16th annual Career Fair at RWU

Features Editor

All dressed up and with resumes in hand, Roger Williams University students of all years flocked to the Fieldhouse for the 16th annual Career Fair put on by the Career Center and held at the Career Center. Unlike any of the past Career Fairs, this was the first year to include panel discussions led by alumni of the university, as well as a networking dinner at the end of the day. Current students had the opportunity to practice their interviewing skills.

With the doors of their school in addition to attending resume workshops. The Career Day itself has been in the works since September. With over 80 tables of possible employers, service organizations and graduate schools to choose from, students of all majors and minors were invited to attend. Members of the Career Center were hoping to obtain a record of attendance of 500 students. With all of the planning that was put into Career Day, there were plenty of opportunities for every major, more than students would think. Whether or not students choose to believe this.

Dancing to their own tune

As diagnosed by the fact that the Hawkettes were the only team in their division, their win also earned the team the chance to go to the national competition held in Mystic, Conn. this summer. However, this amazing feat also creates some difficulty for the team, since they are not yet approved as a club sport. They are merely students, from everything to capture students and finances.

“You have to fend for yourself and be an advocate for Dance Teams,” Rodriguez said in regard to being entirely students. “I feel like we’ve had to do so much with that.” Despite setbacks due to finances and membership, the team has finally gotten off the right start.

“We were nervous because this was only our second time performing the dance, and the first time we did it way at the pop rally. Nichols said. Their high score at the competition has truly sparked their interest.

British Beer Company student discount

The British Beer Company has a student discount. Students at Roger Williams University found a new door to walk through on the weekends in Bristol when they returned back to school from winter break.

On Feb. 27, the British Beer Company joined the Bristol community by moving into what used to be The Anchor Bar, located downtown. The first location in Rhode Island for the company, they said to be the perfect spot to come in and enjoy the new digs.

"They were so welcoming," said Kasey Rowley, one of the founders. "Until TonightHotRl.com, there was nothing easy for us to obtain accurate and updated information about Rhode Island’s best bars."

TonightHotRI.com is a website dedicated to not only Rhode Island nightlife, but to those living in the state getting out and seeing what’s being offered while outside of their own homes. Popular Providence venues like the English Cellar, Atlantic, McFadden’s Restaurant & Salon, Depot and Busters, and the nightlife Ultra are all represented on the site’s schedule, as well as downtown bars and beer companies.

"The idea came about because there was a need for it, and (we) felt the void in the market, and available information about the bars we visit," Rowley said. "By building software that helps both the venues and the public, we were able to make that happen."

So right now, 170 businesses across Rhode Island are on TonightHotRI.com, with more added each day. One of the site’s biggest promotions is the card that gives the cardholder amazing discounts across all the bars within whichever establishment they’re at.

"That includes all the businesses that participate in this, and valid on all days, the cardholder can receive free appetizers or a free cover charge by just presenting their card from TonightHotRI.com."

Over 30 percent of our venues renovate with us every year," Rowley said. "Almost all of them see that it works well for them, and it attracts more customers to their venue. We call them, we meet them. We show them what it does, and most venues that it visits their venue featured on it."

Upcoming the spring season, TonightHotRI.com will be transformed into a new site that will be called GoingOutRI.com. The new site will be a bigger, better, more streamlined and accessible version of tonighthotri.com, and will have more features and more venues so that it’s easier for the user to find what they’re looking for. In August 2012, the site will expand to a mobile version as a great app for anyone on the go.

"GoingOut is looking to launch in every major metropolitan area in the United States," Rowley said. "GoingOutRI.com – that’s where the real story is."

Campus Field House hosts annual Career Fair

Basicall y, we have three questions at the Career Center that students have to answer: Who are you? What do you want to do? How are you going to get there? If a student can leave our office with that plan, then we have been successful.

DANCE: Captains remain hopeful for next year

With their pom-poms in hand (which are very different than the pom-poms that cheerleaders hold), the girls wowed the crowd, proving that their choreography would be a success at their upcoming competition. Little did they know that their choreography would end up rocking the walls at the competition.

For now, the two captains are left with important decisions to make on the future of the Hawksmen. Both Nichols and Rodriquez are set to graduate in May, yet remain quite optimistic in regard to the future of the team. They both hope that the team will succeed at becoming a club sport, and continue to positively move forward.

"At this point, I just hope it continues at the base it leaves us," Nichols said. "As long as we keep pushing forward."

Rodriquez agrees. "We will be looking into doing more Dance Team competitions in the future, even though we won't be here next year."

THEAWARDWINNING HAWKES DANCE TEAM

Mark Fusco
Roger Williams University students flocked to the Field House for the annual Career Fair to meet potential employers.
A person should be convicted for the crimes that he or she has committed, not for the ramifications of those crimes. If Ravi was convicted of invasion of privacy for using a web cam to record his roommate’s Skype conversations, he was guilty, while having sex. Just a few days later, Clementi complained by committing suicide by jumping off the George Washington Bridge in New York. This is a complex situation. Ravi did not turn his web cam on to catch his roommate having sex; rather, he was concerned about how his roommate was spending his time and trying to steal from them. Once he saw what was happening, though, Ravi recorded the video for all of Rutgers University to see. This is the part of the story that Ravi should be held accountable for.

No matter how terrible what Ravi did was, he did not intend for his roommate to kill himself. He did not know there was an invasion of privacy, and in New Jersey, the most extreme sentence for this five year invasion, Ravi’s conviction doubles this sentence, and because he is not a native U.S. citizen, he is facing possible deportation back to India, where he was born.

Ravi has said that he was not angered or bothered by his roommate’s sexual orientation, and that he did not intend to harm his roommate by recording him. Ravi has said that he just acted instantly and inappropriately in several instances, and there is even a text message from Ravi asking his roommate to reconsider changing rooms, and realizing that his sexual orientation doesn’t bother him.

Personally, I don’t think he means any of this to happen. What kind of sick individual hopes for the death of another? What I do think happened was that Ravi was put into a situation that he was never prepared for, and he couldn’t find a way to make a quick, painless joke. I don’t think he should be held accountable for what he said back to Ravi’s sentence should be what is normally given in this case. People are slammed and smeared all the time, and yet we do not take their lives.

It is because of this that many believe that there must have been more happening in the dorm, but Ravi’s stupid actions are the icing on the cake, but they do not make him a killer.

When a celebrity sex tape is unknown to them, is branded a lousy person, local public, internet, people move on. There is no hate crime. Anyway, it may not be as bad as it seems.
