Dear Friend of the PBC:
When we talk about pro bono we often focus on the number of individuals who receive legal representation. These numbers are important because they make a program's success quantifiable and direct representation denotes legal assistance in its purest form. What we don't talk about, but perhaps should, is pro bono aimed at educating and empowering traditionally disempowered communities. This type of pro bono allows an attorney's pro bono hours to impact entire communities rather than a single client. This month we want to spotlight two PBC projects that fall into this category, our Street Sights and PrYSM projects.

Kristen Sherman, Esq., a partner at Adler Pollock & Sheehan, P.C., and Heather Snyder, RWU SOL 3L, volunteered to research and author a monthly legal column in Street Sights, a newspaper that serves "as a forum for advocates, homeless and formerly homeless individuals, students, state officials, and the general public to share accurate and honest information about homelessness." The PBC team has had four columns in the newspaper covering issues such as expungement and the legal implications of sleeping outside. The column reaches thousands of individuals each month.

The Providence Youth Student Movement (PrYSM) came to the PBC with legal questions regarding several regulatory barriers faced by youth preparing for the GED and youth trying to re-enroll in school after dropping out. Staff at PrYSM, founded in 2001 "to mobilize Southeast Asian youth into community organizing campaigns which, a) foster the process of healing and dialogue, b) build support and love for those who are isolated and marginalized, and c) build power in the Southeast Asian community," identified bureaucratic hurdles related to mailing address and identification requirements their youth constituents were facing at the Department of Motor Vehicles. These requirements were delaying, and in some cases preventing, youth from taking the General Education Development (GED) test. Kirsten Kenney, Esq. of Hinckley Allen & Snyder LLP took the lead role on the project, working with RWU SOL 3L, Jessica Stanford, and provided PrYSM with legal advice and counsel. They identified and researched the regulatory requirements to establish whether DMV employees were acting in accordance with those requirements. Had they found violations, the PBC team was prepared to pursue regulatory changes to facilitate easier acquisition of the necessary documentation.

We are very proud of the legal service these two non-traditional pro bono projects have provided and the impact they will have on the community.

Sincerely,

Eliza Vorenberg, J.D.

March 19 Pro Bono Celebration
On March 19, the Pro Bono Collaborative, the Rhode Island Bar Association and Rhode Island Legal Services jointly hosted an event celebrating pro bono. Over 70 attorneys attended the event held at the Garrahy Courthouse and learned about the dire need for pro bono legal service in the state and the many different ways they could help. The law firm of Hinckley Allen & Snyder LLP sponsored this wonderful event.

Does Your Law Firm Have A Pro Bono Policy?
The Pro Bono Collaborative has created a worksheet to assist Rhode Island law firms in creating formal pro bono policies. Creating a formal pro bono policy helps institutionalize the firm's commitment to pro bono and demonstrates to your neighbors in the community that you are serious about helping them. If you would like a copy of the worksheet please email Eliza at evorenberg@rwu.edu

Get Involved: Projects Needing Law Firms

1. Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) Project
   This project would partner the International Institute with a law firm and RWU law students in assisting undocumented immigrant survivors of domestic violence in their petitions to get legal residency. The law involved is relatively straightforward and the Institute has had a good success rate. These matters would involve the collection of evidence and the drafting of affidavits. RWU law students could assist with evidence gathering and affidavit preparation. Carl Krueger, an attorney at the Institute, will provide training and referrals for this project.

   Time Commitment: Moderate

   Number of Attorneys Needed: 2

2. Special Education Compensatory Services Assist RILS in handling a larger number of cases where students have been deprived of educational rights for an extensive period and therefore are owed compensatory services to make them whole/close the educational gap. By bringing a larger number of such cases, RILS hopes to create pressure for more systemic reform in particular school districts.

Time Commitment: Moderate
Number of Attorneys Needed: 2

3. Incorporation Project- Diversity & Inclusion Professionals

The D&IP began as an informal network of friends and colleagues working as diversity practitioners in local businesses, secondary and higher education, as well as state government. The steering committee is currently pursuing the development of a 501(c)(3) or 501(c)(4) membership organization that will offer networking opportunities as well as formal programs.

Time Commitment: Moderate
Number of Attorneys Needed: 2

4. Children & Young Adults SSI Project

To provide assistance to RILS in handling overflow SSI cases of the non-fee generating type when assistance is needed (i.e. not initial application where retroactive benefits are used to compensate attorneys).

Number of Attorneys Needed: 2

5. Transactional Legal Services for Nonprofit Organizations.

The PBC receives several requests each year from nonprofit organizations in need of pro bono legal assistance. Accordingly, we are always in need of attorneys with business law expertise to assist these organizations. This is on an ongoing need, so please contact the PBC if you would like to be added to our list of pro bono attorneys willing to take these matters as they arise.

If your law firm is interested in any of these projects or if you would like additional information, please call Suzy Harrington-Steppen, PBC Project Coordinator, at
