Key Student Organizations Name Leaders for the Class of 2011

Posted by David Logan on 04/13/2010 at 12:00 AM

It is generally recognized that there are two student organizations that represent the pinnacle of accomplishment for law students, the law review and the moot court board. Both of these venerable institutions use rigorous screening to select membership from students in their second year, and then there is another round of vetting for selecting the leadership. Another key group, one that represents all students, is the Student Bar Association (SBA). Below is the “management” for the Roger Williams University Law Review, the Roger Williams Moot Court Board, and the RWU SBA for 2011. Congratulations to all these student leaders!
