Swapping R&R for Public Service

Alternative Spring Break has become a tradition at RWU Law. In its eight years of existence, the program has greatly expanded in size, scope and number of participants. From the PROVIDENCE JOURNAL: "Roger Williams University law school students swap R&R for public service: Alternative Spring Break provides hands-on legal experience," by Tracee M. Herbaugh, Journal Staff Writer

Second-year student Tom Peterson finished up his second placement at the Bronx Defenders in New York. [...] “This is a great way to see the law in action,” he said. “You get a hands-on look at what lawyers do for the public, and it’s a great way to expose yourself to a particular field.”
